THIS FREEDOM

By
A. S. M. HUTCHINSON

Author of
IF WINTER COMES

Professor William Lyon Phelps says:
"Mr. Hutchinson's new novel, 'This Freedom,' grapples resolutely with one of the greatest social problems of our time, and his solution is the only possible solution—the one given nearly two thousand years ago in Palestine. The novel is filled with vivid persons, and there are passages here and there so notable as to place Mr. Hutchinson among the foremost novelists of our time."

Heloise E. Hersey says:
"The book is a great piece of work ... I prophesy a great sale. Let those who will know the truth as to the future task of women read this book. Let those who will save women from the dangers of 'This Freedom' read it again and yet again."

Specimen of postcard supplied to dealers for use in securing advance orders for THIS FREEDOM, by A. S. M. Hutchinson, price $2.00, publication date September 1st—the best seller of the autumn.

Dear Jack:-

I have just finished the "galleys" of ONE of OURS. It is a great book—fully up to what one might expect of the author of THE SONG of the LARK and MY ANTONIA. I have been looking forward to a new book by Miss Cather ever since I finished her last. It surely has been worth waiting for—so different from the ordinary run of fiction, that there is really no comparison.

I believe that with this book Miss Cather will find the place she so well deserves among the novelists of to-day.

Sincerely yours,

BATOUALA

By RENÉ MARAN

The Negro Novel Crowned With the Prix Goncourt

The mere announcement of its publication has brought us big advance orders. Seldom has a book been awaited by the public with such keen interest. And no wonder. A master hand has here depicted a new world, not a fancy world, but a world of solid reality, with new people, new customs, a beautiful mythology of their own—a people who love primitively, marry primitively, and hunt big wild game not for pleasure alone, but as the lion and the tiger hunt—in order to get food.

BATOUALA is the Iliad of the African negro. But it is the Iliad of a people who live in our own day.

The author, René Maran, is a French negro, who holds a position under the French government in the country about which he writes.

Misusing New Books

A COUPLE of weeks ago we received an attractive circular from the Independent, outlining its plans for a special Summer Reading Number. The plan was so attractive in its outline and proposed subject matter that we praised it and reproduced some of the interesting sketches that Tony Sarg had drawn for the number. The program seemed to be so much in line with the suggestions of the Year-Round Bookselling Committee that that organization made mention of it in the Bulletin which it sent out June 15th to the co-operating dealers.

Both the WEEKLY and the Committee are chagrined now to find, when the number is actually issued, that it was not a plan for promoting the sale of books, but for using the public interest in books to promote the Independent. No literary periodical can be so much out of touch with the problems of book distribution that it does not know the damage done by price-cutting, and the taking of text pages in a Summer Reading Number to promote this backward step is a way of hurting book-selling without giving sufficiently valuable service to the Independent's clientele.

The plan of price-cutting is that of offering Summer Reading Menus of five books each. One menu is as follows:

Peter Whiffle	$2.50
Vandemark's Folly	2.00
Truly Rural	2.00
Chauncey Depew	4.00
LeGallienne's Book of English Verse....	3.50
Total	$14.00

Prepaid to subscribers to the Independent for $11.50. Other "menus" are in similar vein.

The Independent does not carry books, does not offer full book service, will not be prepared to supply its customers' needs and answer customers' inquiries in other directions; it is only interested in offering some special advantage to its subscribers to make them continue to be interested in the magazine. The resultant effect on the ultimate distribution of books, which, according to the experience of every bookmaking country in the world, is unfortunate, has not entered into the minds of its publishers at all, altho when they adopted this same plan on one other occasion it was called to their attention.

The real importance of new books is not that they should serve to increase the circulation of such periodicals as are supported, on one hand, by endowments from wealthy men, and, on the other, by advertising; books have neither endowment nor advertising income and have to stand on their own feet. It is not as tho such cuts were any ultimate saving to magazine customers—the only thing that can bring down the price of books is wider distribution, and this suffers curtailment every time the new entrants in the field of bookselling are turned away by price-cutting conditions.

The distribution of books is a thing too important to be disturbed in its growth in order that the sale of magazines or other merchandise may be temporarily increased, and the machinery of distribution is too easy of misadjustment to make it comely that anyone who is appreciative of the importance of books shall disturb the process for personal gain. The whole price-cutting business in the book field comes from people who want to use the prestige of the book to increase the sale of other commodities, and such schemes ought to be discontinued by those others who profess to understand the importance of book distribution.

The Detroit Convention

THE week that has just passed has seen the gathering at Detroit of some two thousand librarians, the full report of whose sessions will soon be available for reading and discussion in the professional papers.

A convention of this kind with a program of such variety and importance is one of the most significant events of the year for all who are interested in the use of books—authors, publishers and the book-trade, as well as the librarians themselves. No one can read the program or look thru the preliminary reports of committees without being struck with the extraordinary diversity of development in the library field and the vast amount of organized and intensive work given to this professional public cause by voluntary workers scattered thru every corner of the country. That so vast an amount of work can be done by a scattered organization and with very small funds for headquarters work is significant of the professional solidarity and enthusiasm of the librarians as a group. In spite of the successful record of the American Library Association for these many years, one feels that its work is but beginning, and that in every direction and in every line of interest new successes and new usefulness are just ahead.

The library general circulation departments have a technique and power to carry the use of books much farther into the diversional and educational life of the community as rapidly as the community will financially back the work. The special libraries have only just begun to secure an understanding of the use of books in business and manufacturing fields and there is unlimited area for growth. The great reference and university libraries seem to be finding each year new ways of making their collections not only more complete, but more usable to scholars and more useful to the country as a whole. Librarians are developing rapidly the use of books with the foreign-born, among the colored, among the blind, in hospitals, on merchant marine, in the Navy and Army and in innumerable other directions. Children's librarians, with their great clientele of twenty million or more possible readers, are in many cases supplying half of the total circulation of our public libraries, especially in the neighborhood branches, and there are rapidly appearing in every city and small town trained workers, who can make each children's shelf tell as it never has told before in the life of the community. The relation of libraries to the schools and to the great common school organizations of the country has only just begun to be developed, but with the educational group and the library group both working together to interest the community in giving books their full place in school life, even to the smallest one-room school house, tremendous growth is just ahead.

The value of a convention like this does not lie wholly, of course, in the sessions themselves, nor does it depend for its whole usefulness on the number who read its reports. The varied accomplishments of such a program mean a year of work by various committees and individuals and that year added to the cumulative power of previous years. The very fact that there are to be reports and summaries of work serves as an incentive and brings to a conclusion problems of research and promotion that might otherwise drift along under pressure of local duties.

The communities which support libraries expect that their best trained people shall contribute some of their time and energy to the national development of the library movement and they are far-sighted to their own gain. It is such contributions to the national work that have brought the American library movement to its pre-eminence among civilized countries. The most magical invention of man has been the production of print by which the past communicates to each succeeding generation. The country which has been most conscious of the duty of using print to its uttermost has been the United States under the organized leadership of this great library group.

Rabelais Censorship

THE judge at Cincinnati, in fining a bookseller for selling Rabelais, has said that "the existence of expurgated editions of these works is conclusive evidence that certain portions of them are not fit to be read by the average person." This judicial opinion may often be quoted in the future, as it apparently produces an interpretation of the law which would keep out of circulation books regarding which there is "evidence that certain portions are not fit to be read by the average person."

There is, of course, a long list of books that might fall into this classification and many of them are sold and will probably continue to be offered in the bookstores.

Rabelais is the most typical example of a work written for another age, which embodies some coarse characteristics of that age as well as its virtues, but which will be perennially alive because of the importance of its content and the vigor of its writing. Whether the public may read it in all its vigor is now disputed. Certainly it is not a book that can be easily expurgated, because a book becomes another thing altogether when so changed.

A court decision in New York State some years ago made the point that it was the gesture of the sale that might be obscene in certain instances rather than the work itself, and this kind of decision would seem to be much sounder ground as a form of censorship than the present decision at Cincinnati.

Rabelais can be so sold and the purchase urged in such words as to make the act of selling an act against the statutes for public decency, as here contended, or it may be sold as Shakespeare or "Don Quixote" is sold, as an accepted part of a world literature.

No complete restriction of the sale of such a book can be of advantage to the nation in any way, and the best movement for improving conditions would be for booksellers to handle all such literature and such selling problems in accordance with their own best ethical standards. There is much room for improvement here, and a little housecleaning at this time will do no harm.

Can History Be Taught in the Schools?

THE increased acrimony that has entered into the discussion of school texts and courses makes it difficult to prophesy the ultimate effect of such criticism of school methods. It has, by rather universal consent, been agreed that no religious books shall be used in our schools, for fear that sectarian bias would be unavoidable, and now it seems as tho it might be claimed that biology and history will become equally unteachable. It would certainly be difficult to teach biology from modern textbooks without some cognizance of the facts of evolution, and yet the Kentucky legislature only escaped making such a decree by one vote.

The current discussion of American history texts has seemed in some aspects to have constructive value, but in other aspects has led only to suggestions of impossible hindrances being placed about publishers and writers. The lengthy discussion in New York schools over history texts has brought about a final report which causes the elimination of one textbook and a suggestion for the revision of several others, as is reported in full in another column.

The various national bodies are now discussing history textbooks. The Daughters of the American Revolution have a Committee on Patriotic Education investigating them, and so have the Knights of Columbus. The Sons of the Revolution have issued statements on the subject, labor unions have been discussing them as to whether they are fair to labor, and recently the United Confederate War Veterans unanimously adopted a report recommending that all schools of the South use for study a pamphlet on the "Truth of the War Conspiracy of 1861," the chairman of the Committee stating that "the young children of the South will now be taught that the South was right, eternally and everlastingly right, in fighting for principles upon which our glorious country was founded."

Pressure of these various movements on the publishers and authors will make their position difficult. While the publishers realize more than anyone else could the importance of these debatable questions regarding our history, they cannot sail with all the winds and must finally make some decision that will leave in the text the virility of a real historical composition.

Trade Relations With Canada

IN coming to closer grips with the question of possible trade relations between the United States and Canada, we must accept as a basis these facts," says Sir George E. Foster in The North American Review. "These summarized are that, geographically and climatically, both countries along a wide range of contiguous territory produce similar commodities and generally in surplus quantities; that each country has the easiest and quickest recourse to very important sources of supply in the other; that both countries base their tariffs on the principle of protection and the practice of preferential treatment within the family; that both have strong aspirations towards national growth and development and thus combine national and economic considerations in the determination of their fiscal policy, and that, while freely acknowledging these fundamentals and being guided thereby, both peoples have the most cordial feelings of good will and friendship towards each other and a desire to do the largest amount of trade with each other possible under conditions as detailed above."

Literary Tocsins

Burton Rascoe gleans from Dr. G. Stanley Hall's "Senescence" that life is mainly a struggle between the toxins and the antitoxins in the large intestine.

One might add that literature is largely a conflict between the tocsins and antitocsins of publicists in the larger literary organs.

—Keith Preston, in Chicago Daily News.

Atlantic Bookselling Classics

AT least two papers on bookselling that have had a marked effect on bookselling progress appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. The first one was Earl Barnes's article in August, 1915, entitled "A New Profession for Women," an article that caused wide discussion and undoubtedly had much to do with the new impulse toward the appearance of women in book retailing. The second article was the one by A. Edward Newton in the issue of October, 1920, called "A Slogan for Booksellers," which provided the trade with its most effective campaign war cry, "Buy A Book A Week." One of the friends of the Atlantic has been so much interested to give out these two articles that the magazine reprinted them in a little booklet in the style of a miniature Atlantic Monthly. Both articles are well worth re-reading, and they belong on the shelves of any student of American book-selling as having had a peculiarly important effect on trade developments.

A Vacation Booklist

AN attractive folder of children's books for vacation reading has been prepared by the American Library Association and just issued, in time for summer use. The list has been compiled by the editorial staff of the Booklist and is a sixteen-page leaflet, containing one hundred and twenty-nine titles of children's books for recreational reading. Each title has a brief note and gives publisher and price. The books are grouped under such headings as: Adventures Here and There; Boys and Girls of Today; Other Days and Lands; Men and Women; Things to Do; Animals and Birds; Poetry; Authors and Legends and For Little Children.

Other lists of recent issue used by both bookstore and library are the Wanderlust Bookshelf; Useful Books for the Home; Business Books for Profit and Pleasure.

Printing Types and Their History

THE Harvard University Press has announced August 25th as the date of publication for D. Berkeley Updike's great book on "Printing Types; Their History, Forms and Use," which will be in two volumes, set up and printed at the Merrymount Press. This material was first used in lectures given by Mr. Updike in connection with the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. As is well known, Mr. Updike, who for twenty-five years has been developing the famous Merrymount Press, has a library on printing and printing specimens that has scarcely an equal, and this library has served as the basis for his own experiments and now furnishes illustrated material for this notable undertaking. The set being printed at the Press itself, it undoubtedly will be one of the most distinguished pieces of book-making of the year.

Copyrights as Private Property

THE New York Evening Sun comments in an editorial on Bernard Shaw's observation on the results of Tolstoy's waiving his property rights in his literary works. The editorial reads:

"In asking public support for the Oxford project of issuing a complete edition of Tolstoy's works in English, Mr. Bernard Shaw calls attention to a singular circumstance. Tolstoy asked publishers to take all advantage of the absence of international copyright agreements between Russia and the other countries. He wanted them to issue his books without regard to any rights the author might be considered to have in them.

"If any less famous writer had taken such a course, Mr. Shaw points out, his works probably would not have been translated at all, 'as it is practically impossible to engage modern capital in publishing or any other enterprise without property rights.'

"This statement, coming from one of the literary high priests of Socialism, is an occurrence worth noting. Mr. Shaw has believed for fifty years or more (and at last accounts still believed) that private property was the present bane of mankind. Ownership and profit as incentives to work and achievement were, as he saw it, utter failures; and our social system was tumbling rapidly into ruin for want of the intelligence to do away with them. In his very latest and talkiest play he said: 'If you can't organize Socialism you can't organize civilized life.' It was, he thought, quite as bad as that. There was really no hope, unless people could be got to live 300 years or more—which would give them more time in which to become Socialists.

"Yet here is Mr. Shaw asserting that Tolstoy was wrong in his socialistic attitude toward copyrights and saying unqualifiedly that you don't get your books properly published unless you stick to the system of property rights.

"If on the one hand we can't organize civilized life without Socialism, and on the other hand it is practically impossible to engage capital without property rights, then it must be we are headed neither 'back to Methuselah' nor forward to the superman but simply to extinction. There is, of course, one other solution: perhaps Bernard Shaw is no longer a Socialist."

Newbery Medal Awarded to Van Loon

THE John Newbery medal, which is to be given annually by the Children's Librarians' Section of the American Library Association "for the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children" produced within the preceding year, was awarded for the first time at the American Library Association meeting in Detroit this week to Hendrik Willem Van Loon for "The Story of Mankind." It is a choice which will arouse universal satisfaction, and the vote which awarded the medal to the "Story of Mankind" represents an overwhelming majority of the children's librarians in the country.

Written for children, perhaps primarily for his two young sons, Hansje and Willem, and in a mood which rebelled against the "dry as dust" study of history in his own youth, the book has won an ovation from grownups. Probably few juveniles have been so regularly snatched from the hands of children and have had their first freshness worn off as father and mother, uncle and aunt enthusiastically read history.

Its freshness and originality, its vision and philosophy of history, its sane and fearless estimate of the true value of personalities and events delight us and command our respect. Mr. Van Loon is well equipped to write a book that is sound and scholarly, as well as diverting.

Born in Rotterdam in 1882, he was educated in private schools at the Hague and Gouda. More or less by chance, he came to America and studied history, economics and the history of art in Cornell and Harvard. At the suggestion of his friend Andrew D. White, he entered into the Associated Press service and afterwards learned something of the newspaper trade in Washington. He was in Moscow, Petrograd and Warsaw until the end of the Russian revolution, then went to Munich—this was in 1907—and spent the next five years studying European history, economics and art. In 1913 he received his Ph.D with high honors. After this he taught the history of art in the University of Wisconsin. As soon as the war broke out, he re-entered the service of the Associated Press and was sent around to different parts of Europe, where his wide linguistic knowledge made him unusually valuable. An accident in 1917 forced him to give up active work as a war correspondent.

Professor Van Loon had to his credit three solid works of history, addressed primarily to adults, before he began his histories for young people. These were "The Fall of the Dutch Republic," published by Houghton in 1913; "The Rise of the Dutch Kingdom," published by Doubleday in 1915; "The Golden Book of Dutch Navigators," published by Century in 1916.

An article by Mr. Van Loon in the Summer Reading Number of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY gave an amusing outline of the development of his peculiar method of picturing history. He had always loved to draw, he said, and in his spare minutes he drew illustrated histories. The first of these was done one summer in the Adirondacks; it was a history of the discovery of America. As he had no pen, he hit upon the idea of using matches to make the drawings. It was the late Lord Bryce who urged him to have the book published, but "A Short History of Discovery" and "A History of England" were both written and illustrated before a publisher was found for any of his histories for the young. Finally, David McKay published "A Short History of Discovery" in 1917. "I am mighty sorry," says Van Loon, "that he did not live to see the success of 'The Story of Mankind.' Perhaps they have a copy of it in the Scotch room of heaven." Since the publication of "A Short History of Discovery," Boni & Liveright have published both "Ancient Man" and "The Story of Mankind."

Parents and teachers often cling too fondly to the past for their children's sakes and feel that if children are provided with the good old nursery classics they are sure to be well nourished and are protected from what is new and flighty and untried. They do not reflect when they are in this frame of mind that literature for children is all comparatively new, and unless there had been vision and originality in authors, and unless this had been encouraged by booksellers and the guardians of the young, there would be no children's books. Contemporary writers for children should be generously encouraged.

This was the tenor of thought in the library convention at Swampscott last year and nobody has felt this more keenly than Frederic G. Melcher, donor of the John Newbery medal. It is his hope that the medal will help to win the attention of authors to the field of children's literature and that the medal may help to reward the original and distinguished work which authors create for children.

Who Was John Newbery?

THERE will be few who will question the choice of the Children's Librarians, or dispute that "The Story of Mankind" was the most distinguished juvenile of 1921; but now that the John Newbery Medal has been awarded, there will be some who will ask,

JOHN NEWBERY RECEIVING OLIVER GOLDSMITH
ON THE INTRODUCTION OF DR. JOHNSON

"Yes, but who was John Newbery? and why is the medal named for him?" The knowing ones will answer, "And what more appropriate, since John Newbery was the first publisher to make books especially for children?"

John Newbery's portrait is best known to us from the pages of the "Vicar of Wakefield," a red-faced, good-natured little man, who was always in a hurry. "He was no sooner alighted," says Dr. Primrose, "but he was in haste to be gone, for he was ever on business of the utmost importance." Dr. Johnson paints a similar picture of him in an article in the Idler, describing Newbery under the name of Jack Whirler. "When he enters a house, his first declaration is that he cannot sit down, and so short are his visits that he seldom appears to have come for any other reason but to say he must go." Washington Irving wrote of him: "Newbery was a worthy, intelligent, kind-hearted man, and a reasonable tho cautious friend to authors, relieving them with small loans when in pecuniary difficulties, tho always taking care to be well repaid by the labor of their pains."

Tho Newbery's interests were diverse, his best claim to fame is as a publisher of juvenile books. The tiny volumes of his Juvenile Library were bound in flowered and gilt Dutch paper, the secret of the manufacture of which has been lost. They included "The Renowned History of Giles Gingerbread, A Little Boy Who Lived Upon Learning," "Mrs. Margery Two Shoes" and "Tommy Trip and His Dog Jowler." He also published the Lluputian Magazine. The authorship of these juveniles is an old literary dispute; but it is probable that Newbery wrote and planned some of them himself. At least, Dr. Primrose says in the "Vicar of Wakefield": "He was when we met him at the time actually compiling materials for the history of one Mr. Thomas Trip." In his own time, John Newbery was undoubtedly more famous for his publications for adults and will always be known for his relations with Dr. Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith.

He was born in 1713 at Waltham St. Lawrence, Berkshire, and was the son of a small farmer. He went to the village school, but for the most part he was self-taught and learned all he knew from reading books. He was an untiring reader and had a wide knowledge of literature. In 1730 he went to Reading as an assistant to William Carnan, proprietor and editor of one of the earliest provincial newspapers, the Reading Mercury. When Carnan died he left a large share of his property to Newbery. Then Newbery married his employer's widow and turned publisher in 1740. In 1745 he was at the Bible and Sun in St. Paul's Churchyard. It was not strange in his time to combine the business of bookseller with that of apothecary, and this was the combination Newbery chose.

As a publisher he issued books and magazines and his earliest paper, the Universal Chronicle or Weekly Gazette, is remembered because Johnson's papers called the Idler were first printed there. In 1760 he started the Public Ledger, in which Goldsmith's "Citizen of the World" first appeared. Later he published separately the Idler, the Rambler and "Lives of the Poets." Goldsmith wrote "The Life of Beau Nash" for Newbery, and in 1763 Newbery advanced Goldsmith 11 pounds upon "The Traveler." It is of Newbery's nephew Francis that the story of Dr. Johnson selling the manuscript of "The Vicar of Wakefield" for 60 pounds is told—one of the best-known literary anecdotes.

The briefest account of him makes us see a pleasant, likable, bustling figure, with a shrewd business sense, a man who brought to his business a taste for good books, imagination and sympathy, originality and foresight. Austin Dobson points out as an example of Newbery's business instinct "the ingenious references to his different wares and publications which crop up unexpectedly in the course of his narratives" and as an example quotes from "Goody Two Shoes": The heroine's father "died miserably" because he was "seized with a violent fever in a place where Dr. James's powder was not to be had." Dr. James's fever powder was one of Newbery's most famous medicines.

Newbery died in 1767 at his house in St. Paul's Churchyard and was succeeded in his business by his son Francis.

Oliver Goldsmith is supposed to have written of him the following epitaph:

"What we say of a thing that has just come in fashion
And that which we do with the dead,
Is the name of the honestest man in the nation:
What more of a man can be said?"

An actual portrait of the old publisher may be seen still on the house in the Churchyard, the northeast corner of Ludgate Hill which has carved upon it in stone life-sized medallions of Dr. Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith and John Newbery. Once the names were gilded, but time has nearly obliterated them. A whole book has been written about Newbery, Welsh's "A Bookseller of the Last Century," but it is rather hard to come by.

The John Newbery medal will undoubtedly stimulate curiosity about this first publisher of children's books, who deserves grateful remembrance.

The Possibility of a Postal Cut

ALL publishers of magazines have been placing very strongly before the Post Office Department of this administration facts concerning the need of some revision of the war taxes on magazine transportation, and the latest reports from Washington indicate that the Postmaster General is giving this subject most serious consideration.

When the rates on periodicals were revised during the war, the pre-war rate of 1 cent a pound for all distances was changed so that the postage on the text became 1½ cents a pound for all distances, but postage on advertising increased every twelve months until four increases had been made. This has so increased the cost of distribution of magazines, especially to distant points, that many magazines have raised their rates to zones beyond the Missouri, or are shipping by express for distribution from distant points.

As these increases were really for war revenue, the publishers urge that the last two of them be rescinded, leaving the text rate 1½ cents and the advertising rate at 1½ cents for zones 1 and 2; 3 cents for zones 3 and 4; 3½ cents for zone 5; 4 cents for zone 6; 5 cents for zone 7; 5½ cents for zone 8.

What About Our History Textbooks?

Pro-British Accusation Leads to Discussion and Investigation

ARE American history books biased in their treatment of national events? Do they discriminate in favor of Great Britain, and belittle the deeds of our own patriotic American ancestors?

Widespread interest in the subject has been aroused during the past few months. From time to time, ever since last October, the daily press has carried on the discussion, and various educators have been engaged in investigation. Discussion has waxed hottest in New York, where Commissioner of Accounts Hirshfield championed the cause of expurgated editions and 100 per cent pure American products, and the Department of Education has been conducting its own examination of the textbooks in use in the city schools;—but whispers of dissatisfaction have been heard in other cities as well, which may mean a nationwide revolt against history as it now is written.

Charges that textbooks used in the schools were wilfully "pro-British and poisonous to the mind of the coming generation" first began to appear last summer. One of the chief agitators at that time was Charles Grant Miller of Staten Island, who wrote a series of articles protesting against so-called anti-American sentiments expressed in some of the principal textbooks used in both elementary and high schools.

While many of his charges were regarded as exaggerated, enough importance was attached to the criticism for Superintendent William Ettinger to appoint a committee of associate district superintendents under Dr. Edgar D. Shimer to give careful study to the question. This committee, working with a sub-committee of twenty-one teachers and principals, has now finished its investigations and submitted its report.

Meanwhile other protests of similar character arose and the cry that a systematic effort was being made by historians to "de-Americanize America" was heard on various sides. Commissioner Hirshfield became interested along with others and was quoted in the press as advocating that our histories be rewritten under the guidance of state officials.

The textbooks under principal accusation were "Barnes' American History for Grammar Grades" by Everett Barnes (Heath); "A School History of the United States" by Albert Bushnell Hart (American Book); "A History of the American People" by Willis N. West (Allyn & Bacon); "Our United States" by William B. Guiteau (Silver, Burdett); and "A History of the United States for Schools" by Andrew McLaughlin and Claude H. Van Tyne (Appleton). The Barnes' history and the Van Tyne history came in for the most criticism, the others sharing in it to a lesser degree.

Beyond the general accusation of pro-British feeling, the five specific charges were:

1. The elimination of the account of the heroic death of Nathan Hale.
2. The description of John Hancock as a "smuggler."
3. The praise bestowed upon the British soldiers who charged the earthworks at Bunker Hill.
4. The description in the Barnes' "History" of the naval battle between the "Bonhomme Richard" and the British ship "Serapis," in which it is stated: "An accidental explosion of powder on board the Serapis killed many of her men, and her captain surrendered," thus taking away from the prestige and glory allotted in history to John Paul Jones.
5. Calling Henry Clay and John Calhoun by the nickname of "War-Hawks."

Those who defend the present histories claim that derogatory remarks and occasional omissions can be found in almost any work, but that the critics in this case concern themselves solely with incidents relating to England and the period of the Revolution. On the face of it this would seem to indicate that they are actuated by a particular animus. Otherwise why would they not examine the texts for material about the Mexican, Civil and Spanish wars?

Some regard the entire agitation as part of an anti-British campaign and not a sincere effort to reform our educational system in so far as it relates to the teaching of American history.

It is interesting to note what James Sullivan, New York State Historian, had to say on the subject in a recent article in the New York Times. His opinion, we believe, voices the feeling of many citizens:

"Anyone who has given this subject consideration knows that the full truth about a historical fact can only be approximated by telling a story so detailed in its nature that volumes would be occupied in the telling. As soon as an author begins to select his facts, he is in danger of not giving an accurate impression to his readers. That is self-evident, for the very process of selection means that he eliminates from consideration some of the facts concerning the statement which he is making.

"The author of a school text has greater difficulties to confront in this matter than any other historical writer. The man who has the privilege of writing a history of the American Revolution which is to consist of several volumes has a much better opportunity of presenting a judicial narrative than has the author who has to put his treatment of it into a few chapters."

As to the final outcome—like many another question, probably no decision rendered can be stamped with the seal of absolute finality. But the recent report submitted by Dr. Shimer's committee of twenty-one school teachers and principals fixes the matter for the time being in so far as the public schools of New York are concerned.

Ten school histories were examined in detail by the investigating committee and while the authors of the books under fire were cleared of the charge of acting from unpatriotic, pro-British motives, one hundred and seventy-six pages of the report are devoted to pointing out the specific things written that ought not to have been written and vice versa.

The position taken by the committee was that, while many of the statements criticized were historically correct, they should not be put before the pupils. The parent must be assured, in the opinion of the committee, that the facts taught and the sentiments expressed in the schools are in full accord with the aims and ideals of the public school system.

Only slight criticism was made of some of the books under investigation, but West's "History of the American People" will have to be rewritten almost completely in order to comply with the requirements of the New York City history course and much in McLaughlin & Van Tyne's history was judged impossible. The books of Barnes, Hart and Guiteau also require considerable renovation.

In considering the exhaustive examination given to these texts, it is surprising to learn how relatively few of these particular histories are in use in the New York schools. Statistics show that only 2.3% of the school children in New York are now using these books. Furthermore, the faults brought out can be easily remedied. James H. McInnes of D. C. Heath & Company is quoted as saying that all the publishers will give careful consideration to the recommendations in an endeavor to conform to the principles approved by the committee.

One significant fact growing out of this agitation is that it marks the first time that teachers have been called together as a body to examine textbooks and to help edit them.

They have helped before in making courses and preparing syllabi, but this textbook study is a new undertaking. Should further agitation lead to a concerted demand for a general revision of school books, will it, in the final analysis, be the teachers or the authors, who decide what to include and what to exclude? And by emphasizing all the stalwart, noble acts of our forefathers, while omitting all mention of baser and less praiseworthy deeds, will our safe and sane histories of the future gain in patriotism all that they lose in color and human interest?

Living Costs To Date

THE most widely used figures on the cost of living are those of the National Industrial Conference Board, which have just issued the figures for May, 1922. This set of figures comes out rather earlier than those of the Department of Labor.

The figures for May are particularly interesting because, for three months in succession, the average has stayed at almost the same level. The highest level in the cost of living was reached in July, 1920, with an increase of 104.5% over that of July, 1914. From this it has sunk to 54.7 for March, 1922, 54.8 for April and 54.9 for May. During these three months the items of food, shelter, fuel, light and sundries have stayed exactly the same, and clothing has risen 1% a month. This apparent settling to a level of living costs for at least a time give the public a more confident attitude toward buying; and the merchants and manufacturers, a more confident attitude in stocking up. It seems not unlikely that the percentage will rise slightly as grain and other foodstuffs rise.

From another point of view the figures are interesting as showing that none of the comparable items have increased as little as have books. The increase in the cost of books to the public has been about 40% on carefully figured ratios. The increase in general sundries, according to the figures given above, is 74%. It is very difficult to name any item that goes into current family purchases that has shown so slight an increase as 40%, and this fact is one that has probably affected favorably the sale of books and should be pointed out by booksellers to those who believe that books have taken an unusual rise.

HARRY A. FRANCK sailed in May for two years in China to work on a volume to succeed "Working North from Patagonia."

A Letter on the Rabelais Case From John G. Kidd

IN reply to your inquiry for particulars on the censorship case would say of course that the Decameron was the count on which the Vice-Society thru its representative, Angers, was trying to land us all the time. Practically the only copies of Rabelais sold were sold to the Vice-Society itself, from whom we received many urgent letters asking about the different editions and if we could supply the books. This part of it was handled in the Mail Order Department just as hundreds of other orders are during the year. It happens, however, that the stuff was shipped by express rather than by mail.

To my mind the whole thing is about as unjust a bit of persecution as has been pulled off in many a day. You will remember that the case was dismissed in April on a technicality. In the meantime the grand jury had been recalled and another indictment was served on me when I returned from my Eastern trip. The judge apparently was anxious to clean up his docket and prepare for vacation. Therefore our lawyers failed to get a continuance of the case until fall when we surely could have worked out some plan that would have been better.

As matters stood with a grand jury of men who absolutely knew nothing of literature, classics or otherwise, there was little chance of our winning in any case. Therefore, on the advice of our attorneys, knowing that we could not get a continuance of the case, we filed a motion of nolo contendere, which means that we do not in any way plead guilty or admit any guilt, but rather than contend with the government we are willing to accept the compromise on the basis of a fine.

Our attorneys didn't for a minute expect that we would be fined to the extent that we were and the general consensus of opinion is that we were persecuted rather than prosecuted. I suppose in the end, by making this compromise, we were saved a great deal of annoyance even as matters stand.

If you are printing this I hope you will print the enclosed editorial along with it which appeared in the June 17th Cincinnati Times-Star. Here is about as clever a defense of the whole matter as one could well imagine.

The inspector did not disguise himself as a high school student but merely wrote in as from one of the colleges asking for copies of the book for their course in English. This was, according to the judge, damning evidence of our perfidy. Had the court been willing to entertain witnesses we could have had the place packed with prominent men of education who would most surely have given evidence in our behalf.

$1000 For Selling Rabelais

THE U. S. District Court, sitting in Cincinnati on June 21st, fined John G. Kidd, head of Stewart Kidd, $1000 for selling "Decameron" and Rabelais on an order from Michigan. Mr. Kidd pleaded nolo contendere and paid the fine. The case first appeared in January, when Post Office inspector Angers, who was also a representative of the Western Society for the Suppression of Vice with headquarters in Chicago, wrote from Grass Lake, Michigan, to Stewart Kidd, writing as if from one of the colleges and asking for an edition of Rabelais. The order was filled and sent by the American Railroad Express, and Inspector Angers brought the case to court under the Federal statute which forbids interstate traffic of "any literature of obscene, indecent or lascivious nature."

Mr. Kidd held at first hearing that Rabelais was a standard book and that its sale was in no wise a violation of the statute.

It is presumed that the inspector had been searching for evidence against Stewart Kidd, because two years ago he had complained of their selling a complete edition of the "Decameron" which they had issued as the publishers. In the case of Rabelais, Stewart Kidd are not the publishers, but had filled the order from the Donohue edition. At the time of the "Decameron" case, Mr. Kidd had withdrawn his edition from the market and had ceased to sell the book in the store. This case came up in April before the Grand Jury, but was postponed because of a mistake in the indictment which had not mentioned the name of the book. In the later charge the earlier sale of "Decameron" was joined with that of Rabelais.

While such a decision is of nation-wide importance, (Mr. Kidd felt that as a local dealer he did not care to fight the case alone, and therefore made no defense. In giving the sentence Judge Peck said "The fact that the works of Boccaccio and Rabelais are classics does not exempt them from the law as enacted by Congress. The existence of expurgated editions of these works is conclusive evidence that certain portions of them are not fit to be read by the average person."

A Misprint?

The American Printer carries a leading article on "Advance of the Electrotyping Craft." As the increase in the cost of electros in book-making has been about 120 per cent since pre-war times, even a 10 per cent increase showing up in 1921, one wonders whether the last word in the title of the above article may have been misspelled.

Bowdlerism

Editorial in Cincinnati Times-Star, June 17th,

ONCE upon a time there lived a man named Thomas Bowdler, who invented what is known as "Bowdlerism." Mr. Bowdler published the "Family Shakespeare" in ten volumes, "in which nothing is added to the original text; but those words and expressions are omitted which can not with propriety be read aloud in a family."

Thomas Bowdler has been dead almost a hundred years, but his soul goes marching on. Indeed, it must have entered into public office. The United States Government has indicted John G. Kidd, a member of a firm operating a large publishing house and book store, for having sold and sent to another State copies of Boccaccio's "Decameron" and Rabelais's works. The "Decameron" is the first set of short stories ever written, the work of an Italian who as a classicist did quite as much as any other man to bring about the great literary Renaissance that ushered in modern civilization. Rabelais, the immortal French satirist, lived a century and a half later. Neither of the two men wrote for the Ohio Valley in the twentieth century. But that in itself is not a sin. We should not expect too much of the seers and prophets of the past. That they were of their day and generation is really their great interest for us, and we do not wish to read their works after Mr. Bowdler's successors in literary prudery get thru with them. We want our Boccaccio and our Rabelais and our Chaucer and our Shakespeare, as those great men wrote, and not as some modern busybody would "blue-pencil" them.

To indict an otherwise lawful publisher and bookseller for publishing and selling such classics in their original text is a good deal like trying for heresy a Christian who in this day and generation permits science to modify his ideas as to the legendary non-essentials of the Old Testament.

Facilitating Shop Details

IN the conduct of a bookstore, there are many demands for apparatus to help in book displays, for materials to facilitate order handling and general store records. The materials for such work have been much more highly developed for public library purposes than for bookshops, and there are numerous cases in which the bookseller would find the library materials most useful, oftentimes saving special preparation of printed matter, to say nothing of having it in better shape and for less money by using what is prepared for a much larger consumption.

Among the various things that are made in quantity for such uses are: card holders of slotted blocks that will hold cards upright in front of rows of books; book holders that will hold a displayed volume at the proper angle to the eye with place for an advertising card, this to be used either in the window or in the store; mounting papers, to be used in preparing posters for window or counter; shelf sign holders or shelf signs—most of the customary classifications of books can be had in ready printed form for shelf labeling, which will make the bookshelves much more alluring for the casual customer; book ends, to be used in the window, for counter displays or on shelves; dictionary holders, valuable as a place of rest for the big catalogs or for the display of dictionaries; magazine indicators that will make it easy for customers at the periodical counter to see what has just arrived; scrap books and clipping holders to keep record of the store's advertisements and circulars as a place to keep samples of other firm's well-prepared advertisements that may be used for new lay-outs; transparent cloth and repair tapes for books that may be damaged but which could easily be made salable by care; ready ruled cards, suitable for use of buyer's; complete equipment for circulating libraries—cards for records, dating stamps, etc. Ready prepared material can save much time and make the stores more efficient.

Color Schemes in Windows

AN effective method used in many types of window dressing is that of having the whole display in some dominant color. This has perhaps not been so applicable to books as to leather goods, dresses, etc. A recent display, however, in the Vesey Street window of the Ronald Press made an interesting appeal to the passerby because of its color.

The whole window was in the blue color tone that is characteristic of the Ronald wrappers. The window cards were lettered in black on the same blue paper as the wrappers, on each side of the window stood a vase of a slightly deeper blue tone, and draped across the three display stands was a piece of blue tapestry. The particular book being shown was the new volume on Corporation Procedure, and the whole plan gave this volume a setting that has been difficult to get with books alone.

THE SUCCESS of his first novel very much surprises Jim Tully, ex-prizefighter and hobo. He says his chief occupation before he wrote "Emmet Lawler" in addition to hoboing and prize-fighting was reading Keats in the nearest public library.

A Better Homes Exposition Sells Books

By Ward Macauley

Of Macauley's Bookstore, Detroit, Mich

THE public exposition offers a promising opportunity for a concrete demonstration of the value and interest of books. An attractive and suitable display at such an exhibition is probably the only possible means by which the book-trade can get its product directly before that public which does not customarily visit the book-stores. The proportion of the population which enters our doors with any frequency is small; the proportion attending a great public display of this kind is relatively large.

Books a Part of Home Life

Recently a Better Homes Exposition was held in the immense convention hall of the General Motors Building in Detroit. The displays included everything that could be thought of in connection with home buying or building and the making of better homes. Not only were real estate companies and builders represented, but practically all lines that had to do with the various phases of the physical life of the home and also nearly every article or influence that can make life more finely enjoyable was given its chance to appeal to visitors at the exposition.

Such an exposition offers the opportunity to plant in people's minds the idea that books are an indispensable part of home life and that a dwelling place without books cannot aspire to be anything deserving the name of home. This is the very thought we most need to emphasize. There are thousands of homes where apparently books mean less than nothing; the casual visitor finds no friendly volume to console his moment of waiting; the nearest approach to literature that visits the house is the afternoon paper and its failure to arrive on time is a calamity. An exhibition of books at an exposition where the home is the prime consideration should do much to convey this wholesome thought to many who had previously given it little consideration. Accordingly we made a display which proved very fruitful from this standpoint of interesting the non-reader.

For Profit and Pleasure

The books that were exhibited may be divided into two classes: first, those books of a practical nature that are intended to instruct in some activity concerned with the home, necessary books of reference, etc.; second, attractive books in the field of literature shown for the purpose of demonstrating how much well selected books can add to the joy of home-life.

The first class included books on building, on interior decoration, on gardening, cook-books, dictionaries, atlases, books on sex subjects, books on the family budget, books of etiquette, books of home games, and many others on allied subjects. The second class included mainly standard works in attractive editions, pleasingly arranged between book ends and on book shelves. Of course, the books of Edgar Guest played a prominent part in this exhibit and were tied up with the purposes of the display by a placard referring to Mr. Guest as the poet of the home.

It proved very interesting to note the comment of those who visited the booth, many of whom examined the books at leisure and with whom we discussed the place that books might fill in the home. Dictionaries aroused keen interest and the fact was clearly revealed that there are a great many better class American homes that do not contain a good modern dictionary, often a Webster of ancient vintage being the best that can be boasted. A second fact was that everybody recognized that a dictionary is a vital need. You never hear anyone say: "I have no need of a dictionary." Hundreds of people examined the dictionaries displayed and a great many sales will undoubtedly result.

Dictionaries and Cook Books Popular

Next to dictionaries, the Stall and Lowry books aroused the most interest. It was noteworthy that a great many people did not realize that the market affords dependable books on these subjects. Some of the comment was more or less jocular. One woman, seeing a copy of "What a Man of 45 Ought to Know" remarked: "Well, if he doesn't know all there is to know by that time, he's hopeless." In the main, however, the comment was in serious vein and many seemed glad to learn that dependable literature on the subject was obtainable.

Cook-books came next in for attention. Interest was greatly increased by the services of two attractive girls wearing aprons and caps bearing the words: "The Boston Cooking School Cook Book." The girls mingled with the crowds and also assisted in passing out pamphlets describing the various domestic science books published by Little, Brown and Company.

Pamphlets describing the Merriam dictionaries, the Vir Publishing Company's publications and the Nelson New Century Library, besides a special circular describing all the various "Books for the Home" were distributed. Several other lines might also have been equally appropriately represented had time for preparation permitted.

The book entitled "Spending the Family Income" aroused much satirical comment, particularly when a man and his wife visited the booth together. One husband caustically remarked: "My wife can do that easy enough without buying any book about it."

Naturally, the title of "A Thousand Ways to Please a Husband" (which has no doubt been an effective factor in its sale) aroused much humorous remark. One man said: "Now if you had one about a thousand ways to please a wife, I'd buy it in a minute." The comment, whether humorous or in a serious vein, indicated a widespread interest in books, showed, indeed, that books have a nearly universal appeal, as few passed the booth without giving the books at least a casual inspection.

One lesson we learned was that people are easily interested in practical books. Many persons who have never learned the fascination of fiction will study a book that gives plain information on a subject in which they are especially interested. We tried to convey this idea in a poster that read:

Books For The Home

You Will Find These Books of Constant Practical Value in Your Home Life.

One of the biggest values in an exhibition such as this is the opportunity it gives you to make new friends and to remind old ones of your existence. If you have any illusion that you and your business are known to everybody, stop ten people on the street and ask to be directed to your own store. The result is likely to be a revelation. The personal contact with the public may be made a vital asset. You get a real chance to talk with people who are not your customers. You may win hundreds of converts to the idea of books and reading. It is important that the display be made as attractive as possible and that everything in it conforms to the general idea around which the exposition itself is centered. One of the most efficient members of the selling force should be in charge. As the crowds attend expositions mostly in the evening, this can be done without detriment to routine efficiency. To give the public its impression of your business from contact with your least informed employees would nullify the whole value of the display.

A book booth at a public exposition may be summed up as good long pull advertising. Immediate sales will result, some at the booth, more at the book-store but the real value lies in the chance to demonstrate to thousands the part that books may play in their lives and such results naturally are spread over the months and years to come. In many cases several stores will be willing to co-operate in staging displays and in the great Portland and Philadelphia World Fairs of 1925 and 1926, no doubt the publishers will see the wisdom of united effort in book display.

Another and easily applicable lesson of the Better Homes Exhibit was that people readily buy books about the home, and this should lead us to make frequent window and store displays of this kind. The returns are sure to be rich, and inquiries will come for weeks after the displays have been removed. Interest in ephemeral books should not be allowed to distract our attention from this profitable and worthwhile activity.

A Two-Foot Shelf For a Country School

WHAT twenty-five books would you choose first for a one-room country school?

To help answer this question and to stimulate interest in school libraries a voting contest is being held by the American Library Association at its convention in Detroit, June 26-July 1, and by the National Education Association at its conference in Boston, July 3-8. The one hundred titles printed below, from which the twenty-five are to be chosen, were taken from the "Graded List of Books for Children" compiled by the N. E. A. and published by the A. L. A. Booksellers may find it interesting to check this list and compare their choice later with the final choice of the teachers and librarians. The final list of twenty-five titles will be published by the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY later.

Fishing Books

THE art of connecting books with summer activities has been much more strongly developed this year than ever before, and one of the most interesting and effective displays that has been made is that at Grant's Book Shop in Utica, New York. Grant's Book Shop has, as a feature of its summer selling an annual Fishing Book Window, but, this year, it was planned to emphasize the fishing tackle of well-known Utica sporting goods manufacturers in connection with books. Material to dress the window was borrowed from the Utica Duxbak Corporation, one of the largest manufacturers of waterproof clothing in the world, the Horrocks-Ibbotson Co., manufacturers of fishing rods and fishing tackle, also known all over the world, the Fred D. Devine Co., specializing in fine fishing rods and from a number of dealers and jobbers representing various lines of camping outfits and fishing specialties.

A summer camp and council fire were the central feature of the display, and the fishing tackle, and fishing books with their attractive covers, and "Take Along a Book" posters made a well-unified window. In making the window attractive the cooperation of the local headquarters of the Boy Scouts was obtained. A number of the scouts went out in the woods and cut the balsam used to get a woodsey atmosphere. The Scout Commissioner himself helped arrange the council fire.

In the right of the window attached to the glass was a Utica Sporting Goods Directory, listing alphabetically by subject the various concerns in Utica from whom could be secured the different articles shown in the window. This information attracted a lot of attention and saved a great many unnecessary questions. The articles scattered thruout the window were numbered with Dennison's consecutive numbers and a corresponding list was posted inside.

Who Judges the Jacket ?

A CASE quite new in book publishing has been brought into the English courts in connection with the book jacket reproduced herewith. The author of this new book, entitled "The Much Chosen Race," has moved for an injunction against Stanley Paul & Co. to restrain them from using this design in connection with his book, either as cover or jacket. The court has granted interim injunction. The plaintiff, Sydney A. Moseley, stated that he objected to this jacket as being vulgar and offensive, and the judge found that the picture used justified the complaint and that the plaintiff had the right to be protected from having his name associated with such a cover without his consent.

The publishers base their defense on their agreement with the author, which provided that "all details as to manner of production, publication and advertisement shall be left to the sole discretion of the publishers. They shall bear all expenses of production, publication and advertisement of said new work." The judge ruled that the cover was not a "detail" at all, that it was the most prominent part of the advertisement of the book to the public.

The second ground of defense was that the contents of the book were adequately represented by the cover. Counsel for the plaintiff said he was a well-known author and a Jew, and he had written the book which criticized some of the Moslem practices and customs of the Jews living in England. The judge, having heard passages from the contents, believed that the text had never sunk to the depths of vulgarity of the cover chosen. The defendants then contended that the author must prove that the publishers were guilty of mala fides. This the court said was not so, as the publishers must be taken to contemplate the natural effects of their act, and the natural effect of this cover was to injure the reputation of the author.

The court said that on an application for interim injunction it was necessary to consider the balance of convenience. The publishers would suffer only the loss of destruction of the covers, which could easily be compensated for by money payment. On the other hand, if the author proved right at the subsequent hearing and no injunction had been granted, it would be impossible to measure the injury that might have been done to his reputation as an author. An injunction was granted until the trial of the action or further order. In view of this decision, and in order not to delay unduly publication, the publisher agreed with the author to deface the wrapper by a label stating the result of the action.

A letter from Sydney A. Moseley, in The Bookseller and Stationery Trades Journal says:

"Without exception, I believe, publishers contend that the question of the design of the jacket is a matter entirely for themselves. This is a most extraordinary attitude—and one which as an author I assail, as, indeed, Mr. Justice Sargant did in no unmeasured terms.

THE JACKET WHICH HAS BROUGHT A CURIOUS CASE INTO THE BRITISH COURTS.

"Hitherto publishers of my works have not only permitted me to approve but to suggest the design for the jacket. Before this action I was informed that this was "a matter of courtesy." I think it of public importance it should be known that usually the author is not responsible for what appears on the cover, altho in view of Mr. Justice Sargant's strong disapproval a new situation has arisen."

This decision will be of interest to American publishers, as it brings up the whole question of the publisher's responsibility for planning a book. This, however, seems to be an issue that is little likely to be raised, as the interest of both author and publisher in preserving a just relation between text and cover is usually a mutual one.

"A ROMANCE is a story surcharged with plot," says Henry S. Canby, in the Evening Post. "A novel is a story embodying convincing and interesting character. These they are whatever else they may be. Whatever else is added makes them so much the less novel and romance."

Good Book-Making

THESE is one point in good book-making that ought to be easy to arrange for in any layout, and that is the proportion of the margins. The wrong relation between the four margins of the page spoils many books. Very often this is because the type page is set too near to the middle of the whole page instead of making the outside margin wider than the inside and the bottom wider than either. Another point of carelessness has been emphasized by a letter recently sent to the Publishers' Association by President Root of the American Library Association. He points out that lately many books have been made with so narrow an inside margin that when, after first use they are sent to the library bindery for resewing, the over-stitching cannot be made without bringing the inside type line so close in that it cannot be read when again circulated. No library can get full use out of current fiction without rebinding, and such a condition probably will not happen when once the possibility of the mistake has been pointed out to the publisher.

Very often we have occasion to feel that it would be a most excellent custom to have the printer's name put in every book, from whose printing his shop could gain any credit or distinction. Such mention could do no harm to the publisher and would gradually build up a reputation for printers who could properly handle book work. This comes again to mind in picking up a very beautiful volume published by B. W. Huebsch entitled "American Indian Life." The quarto volume is beautifully planned in type and margins, and the presswork is of most careful character. There are also color plates beautifully reproduced, and the half cloth binding is admirably suited to the subject. It is a book that has apparently been a labor of love, put thru by those who knew the subject.

Henry Holt & Company have added a new volume on Bermuda to the Rider Guide Series, and, as with the previous volume on New York, the typography has been very carefully adapted to the needs of such a book. A guide book with its many needs for condensation requires a very careful use of types so that different things may be clearly indicated, and all these needs seem to have been well worked out. The end papers and binding are well planned to give an attractive appearance to the book, and the maps, which have been made by Rand, McNally especially for the book, are clearly lettered and easily used.

A typography well planned to suit a long novel is shown in Appleton's printing of the "Way of Revelation" by Wilfrid Ewart. The type and paper are happily selected, and the volume very suitably bound.

An excellent use of semi-flexible cloth to make a novel that is pleasant to the hand is shown in Brentano's publication "The Personal Touch" by Emma Brunner. Brentano's use a two color title and a diagonal design with their motto, Nunquam Dormio.

A good piece of color printing for frontispiece use is shown in Doubleday's new novel by Harriet Comstock entitled "At the Crossroads." The frontispiece is again used for an effective jacket. The type page of the book is also pleasing as well as the presswork.

Doubleday has also given an attractive type page and title page to a volume on "The Value of Good Manners," altho the binding and jacket do not seem to be as satisfactory as the interior.

A volume difficult to plan because of the short chapters and many poetry quotations has been admirably done by Knopf. This is Robert Graves's volume entitled "On English Poetry." The cover design, red ink on yellow, seems to be more bizarre than suitable.

W. A. Wilde & Company have made an attractive volume of Walter Prichard Eaton's new volume of essays "Penguin Persons and Peppermints." The little woodcuts at the head of each chapter followed by the italics chapter titles make very effective pages.

No publisher has given more thought to the question of book jackets as an effective feature of counter or window display than has George H. Doran & Company. To look thru a season's output shows how effectively they have attacked this problem. Among the artists who have been especially successful for them is A. Cory Kilvert, who has done for them the cover for Irvin Cobb's "Sundry Accounts," for Anthony Wharton's "Joan of Overbarrow," for "Three Men and A Maid" by P. G. Wodehouse, for "Tarrant of Tin Spout" by Henry Oyen, for "The Kingfisher" by Phyllis Bottome, any one of which would bring a book to prominence in an average display. Other very attractive covers on their recent output are the delicate coloring of Onoto Watanna's "Sunny San," the lavender and blue of "Castles in the Air" by Baroness Orczy, and the brilliant orange and yellow of "Eyes of Love" by Corra Harris. Doran has also come close to the Knopf idea of using strong coloring for jackets, as is shown in "Jiminy" by Gilbert W. Gabriel, "Crome Yellow" by Aldous L. Huxley. The Irvin Cobb volume is especially a good piece of printing and has a satisfactory use of rules at top and bottom of page. There is also an excellent typographical arrangement for the anonymous novel "Hoax," in which the black type and yellow top suggestive of Knopf are used.

Purifying the Movies

IN facing the problem of movie clean-up, Director Will H. Hays has taken prompt action, and the result of a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association which he heads is a letter of warning that will be posted in every producing studio. These bulletins call on all employees to live up to the spirit of the Association, which has for one of its objects the advancement of the industry by establishing and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production."

Postmaster-General Will Hays
Enters Into Hollywood

(In the Manner but Without the Connivance of Vachel Lindsay)

The audience is to be taught how to simulate the sound of the bass drum, the tambourines, the lions and other audible properties. Let the speaker maintain a sonorous pontifical tone thruout.

Hays came first, with a guard of marines.
(Are you saved, Charlie Chaplin, are you saved?)
Hallelujah! cried the actorines.
(Are you saved, Charlie Chaplin, are you saved.)
Then came the cowboys, swaying in their saddles,
Then the comedians, a-swinging of their paddles;
Handsome heroes with their hair pomaded
Marched behind the General, strutted and paraded.
(Are you saved, Mack Sennett, are you saved?)

Hays came first with his teeth shining white, Beating the bass drum with all his might.
(Are you saved, Bill Hart, are you saved?)
Boom, boom, boom-boom-boom!
Boom, boom, boom-boom-boom!
All the directors with their shiny puttees,
Ten thousand cuties with dimpled knees.
Hallelujah! cried the guard of marines,
Pounding out the chorus on their tambourines—
Zing, zing, zing-zing-zing!
Prominent producers, plutocrats,
Wearing little halos on their tall silk hats—
(Are you saved, Doug Fairbanks, are you saved?)

They marched into Hollywood beating on their drums,
Right thru the harem scenes, right thru the slums,
Right across the desert with the camels and the sand, Tambourines banging in the Promised Land!
Zing! said the tambourines, zing! zing! zing!
Zing, zing, zing-zing-zing!
As Hays and his penitents started in to sing—
(Are you saved, Mary Pickford, are you saved?)

Bang! went the pistol of a Wild West Sheriff, Shooting German films with a protective tariff.
Bang! went the rifles of the press sheet dispensers, Firing volleys at the ranks of the censors.
Hays bore the banner,

Hays beat the drum.
(Are you saved, Charlie Ray, are you saved?)
Hollywood basked in its copyrighted sun.
(Are you saved, Tom Ince, are you saved?)
Hollywood wondered what was being done.
(Are you saved, Ben Turpin, are you saved?)
Out from the bungalows the people came pouring.
The comedy lions all came a-roaring—
Gr-r-r-r-r-r-r!
Vampire and villain, cave man and bum,
Following the boom of the big bass drum.
Boom, boom, boom-boom-boom!
Boom, boom, boom-boom-boom!
And they saw Will Hays and his sanctified band
Raising their banner in the Promised Land;
And they heard Will Hays in a voice like the sea, Shouting, thundering: "Listen to me!
Listen to me!"
His words were like flame, his words were like fire,
His words purged Hollywood clean of mire,
His words made Hollywood whiter than the snow.
And all of the people started in to sing,
Started in to sing:
"We are saved (boom, boom),
We are saved (boom, boom),
We are saved, Will Hays, we are saved!"

Play Censorship

THE protest made against Eugene O'Neil's "The Hairy Ape," tho withdrawn, brought new attention to the problem of play censorship, and the committee who are arranging in New York for a panel of 300 persons to pass on plays has, by way of preliminary definitions, decided that there will be careful distinctions made between a serious play dealing with delicate subjects in a frank manner and a frivolous play made suggestive and indecent for commercial purposes. The names of the panel of 300 from whom juries will be chosen has not yet been announced.

New York's Printing Industry

THE Merchants' Association of New York has just published a new analysis of the census of manufactures made by the Department of Commerce in 1919. This shows that printing is the second industry of New York City following clothing, with a total production of $345,989,264. This makes it 1-15 of the entire manufactured output of the city. The average income of all wage earners in the city was $1261; of clerks $1529; of officers, superintendents and managers $2103.

A Week's Gleanings of Book-Trade News

WILLIAM LYON PHELPS of Yale University, will contribute regularly a series of talks on new business, new plays, music in connection with literature and the arts to Scribner's Magazine. The series is to be called "As I Like It."

"THE Van Eycks and their Followers" by Sir Martin Conway, just published by Dutton's, is an art book of the sort we have not had in recent years. It is not a reissue of the author's earlier book, now out of print, but is a connected account of the artists of the Low Countries down to Bruegal. The book has nearly a hundred illustrations.

THE PUBLICATION of an historical work by George Macaulay Trevelyan is an event. "British History in the Nineteenth Century," which covers the period from 1782 to 1901, is announced by Longmans, Green as now being nearly ready.

AN UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPT by Jane Austen was recently discovered in England. It is to be published there, and Stokes has made arrangements for the American edition, which will be ready during the summer. The volume will contain an early novel—probably written before 1800—and several shorter pieces.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY is planning to bring out in the near future a complete sixteen volume edition of Lafcadio Hearn's works. The first edition will be limited to 750 copies, each set being autographed by Madam Hearn. There will be 125 full-page illustrations.

"Who are the best three women poets living in England to-day?" asks Clement K. Shorter in the London Sphere, and answers his own question—"I think they are Miss Charlotte Mew (Mr. Thomas Hardy's favourite), Lady Margaret Sackville, and Mrs. Masterman."

THE PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS will publish early in the fall a volume of Melville's prose sketches and one of his poetry. The material in the two volumes will comprise only that portion of Melville's work which has not hitherto appeared in book form or has long been out of print.

DONN BYRNE and his wife have recently sailed for Europe. His new book, "The Wind Bloweth" will succeed "Messer Marco Polo" this fall. "Dolly" Byrne was co-author with Gilda Varesi of "Enter Madame."

A NEW EDITION of D. H. Lawrence's "Sons and Lovers" has just been published by Mitchell Kennerley.

"HERE is Stephen Graham gone to Darien, there, like bold Cortez, to stand upon a peak and view the Pacific," says the London Graphic. "It has been seen by many eyes since Cortez set his upon it, but always in Keats's famous line there is the cry of a book waiting to be written. 'Silent upon a peak in Darien!' It should be the note, the text, of a fine little chronicle by Mr. Graham, who, hitherto, has not ranged Central America, tho he has footed many other parts of the world."

A PUBLISHING enterprise of unusual scope is begun with the publication of a citizenship series to be issued by the American Viewpoint Society, a department of Boni & Liveright. Donald F. Stewart is the editor of the series, and the first volume is "We and Our Government," a complete American civics, by Jeremiah W. Jenks and Rufus Daniel Smith of New York University. The volume is a large octavo, bound in craft leather, and a marked feature of the volume is the illustrating of it with 450 half tones and 13 beautiful drawings by Hansen Booth. The text of the volume which consists of about 50,000 words is supplemented by very full captions under the numerous illustrations, and no essential facts of the text are omitted from the continuous illustrative feature. The illustrations are so continuous that they might almost be considered to be a moving picture development of the theme of the text. This feature is expected to be very important in the use of the series with new citizens. In planning this series, Mr. Liveright has organized an advisory board including forty well-known educators, of which he serves as chairman, men such as Albert Bushnell Hart, Eugene Lyman Fiske, Ashley H. Thorndyke, Angelo Patri and others.

The American Viewpoint Society has a letter from John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education, saying:

"You are performing a great service to the cause of education in this country. The machinery which you have devised is a piece of work of the very highest type and will guarantee satisfactory results."

Albert Bushnell Hart says:

"The first volume is the best brief study of the method of popular education that has ever been given to the public."

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

GABRIEL WELLS, the rare book dealer, will sail on the Majestic, July 8, for his annual trip to England and the Continent.

A new feature of the Boston Public Library Bulletin is a series of bibliographies of subjects of a timely character. The last relates to pageants.

The recognition at the present time accorded to Herman Melville gives particular interest to the announcement from the Princeton University Press that two volumes, one of Melville's prose sketches and the other of his poetry, are listed for early autumn publication.

The list of Vermont authors now living who have published books of verse, which appeared in the March Bulletin of the Vermont Public Library Commission, is supplemented in the June number with a list of fiction by native Vermonters, those who have adopted that State, and works in which the scenes are laid in Vermont.

The Bookman's Journal Office announce the publication of "Etching Craft," a guide for students and collectors by W. P. Robins, R. E., with a preface by Martin Hardie. It will be profusely illustrated giving special attention to depicting stages in the production of prints. Part I will deal with "The History of Etching;" Part II with "Notes on the Making of Etchings;" and Part III with "A Comprehensive Bibliography." The book will be one which all lovers of the art will care to own.

Michael Sadlier has compiled and Chaundy & Cox of London have published "Excursions in Victorian Bibliography" treating of Trollope, Disraeli, Wilkie, Collins, Whyte-Melville, Mrs. Gaskell and Herman Melville. Mr. Sadlier has made literary appreciation a feature of his work. There is an interesting essay on Trollope, and he has prefixed to several of his sections notes indicating the general character of the authors' work dealt with. Altogether it is a work of importance, includes authors who have not hitherto received adequate treatment, and gives a great deal of information of interest to the collector.

The June number of The Bookman's Journal and Print Collector is an interesting number. Its leading article "Collected Books on Spiritualism" by Dr. Ellis Powell will be of special interest at this time. "Raeburn in Modern Color Mezzotint," by Malcolm C. Salaman, illustrated with two fine color plates; "Our First Encyclopedia" by W. A. Atkinson; "New Facts about a Famous Bewick Engraving" (the Chillingham Bull) by George H. Sargent; are timely and special articles of interest to book and print collectors. It is growing more and more clear with every issue that this is a magazine that collectors should have.

The one hundredth anniversary of the death of E. T. W. Hoffman, the famous German author, occurred on June 25. It has been repeatedly said that no German writer of tales and novelettes has ever exerted within the limitations of the sphere of his own activity a more potential influence on French, English American and German literature than Hoffman. As master of the weird and uncanny he is of particular interest to students of American literature, for, undoubtedly, Poe received the inspiration for no inconsiderable part of his writings from his German prototype.

The Leyden Pilgrim Messenger, an interesting journal edited by the Leyden Pilgrim Fathers' Society and by the trustees of the William the Silent Fund, the first number of which quarterly appeared at Leyden in May, contains an article by Professor A. Eckhof of Leyden University, on a little known imprint of the Brewster Press at Leyden. This is a translation of a Puritan book, made by a Dutch minister, Vincentius Meusevoet, entitled "Een Kiare ende Dundeljcke utlegginghe over de Thien Cheboden des Heeren," Leyden, 1617. The work was discovered by George Ernest Bowman of the Boston Society of Mayflower Descendants, but two copies have since turned up in Holland.

An extremely rare Tennyson item is the reprint of "Timbucto" bearing the date of 1829, the same as "Prolusiones" with which it was printed in the same year. About twenty-five years ago a copy came into the market and was bought by Albert T. Morgan of this city. At his sale it was purchased by William Harris Arnold. Some years later Winston Hagen bid $25 for a copy at Anderson's for what he supposed was "Prolusiones" altho the auction catalog mentioned only "Timbucto" and thought it a defective copy when he received it. He took it to Beverly Chew who pronounced it a copy of the extremely rare reprint. Since this second discovery a third copy has turned up in England and is now owned by Thomas J. Wise, the English bibliographer and collector.

Harold C. Holmes, a San Francisco bookseller, has made a contribution to Mark Twain bibliography by the discovery of his second published work, following the "Jumping Frog" of 1867, which has been considered by Mark Twain bibliographers as his first publication in book form, and preceding the "Innocents Abroad" which has been considered his second book. In 1868 there appeared a thin volume of 104 pages entitled "Marsh's Manual of Reformed Phonetic Short-Hand" by Andrew J. Marsh, published by H. H. Bancroft & Co., of San Francisco, 1868. This was copyrighted 1868 with an introduction by Marsh, 608 Washington Street, San Francisco, dated 1868. This volume contains first in shorthand, on pages 78 and 79, Mark Twain's speech in reply to the toast to "Woman" given at the Correspondents Club dinner at Washington, 1867. The speech is printed also on pages 91 and 92. In this first published version the speech differs somewhat from the generally accepted speech in the volume of Mark Twain's speeches published by Harpers in 1910. Mr. Holmes showed the book to John Howell, the San Francisco rare book dealer, who declares it to be Mark Twain's second appearance in print in book form.

In a recent issue of The Saturday Review of London, it noted, apparently in surprise, that the "craze for first editions still continues unabated," and added "there must be many who have on their shelves books which are at the moment worth far more than their owners imagine, and—a word to the wise—no man can tell how long this particular fashion will endure." "True!" says The Bookman's Journal, "But considering that it has lasted for half a century or more, that untold thousands are locked up in first editions, it is no more likely to die out than the collecting of any other article of vertu. The taste for first editions emerged unscathed, indeed strengthened, from the war, a testing time of every manner of luxury. The war years, indeed, brought together for the first time fresh buyers and fresh shops, particularly by the movement of troops and especially of overseas officers. The cult has visibly grown during the troublous peace since the war, as witness the record prices given for living authors' writings. As far back as 1887 the hobby was firmly rooted, specially in Dickens and Thackeray, and other favorites, as may be seen by the number of "firsts" noted in Volume I of the "Book Prices Current."

The Most Puzzling Mark Twain

Kansas City Public Library,

June 21, 1922

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY,

May I add a word about Mark Twain and the first edition of "The Gilded Age"?

I have the Johnson copy, with L. S. from Walter Bliss, stating that "Lack of cut on p. 403 determines the Real First Edition, etc." This copy is in cloth, Hartford: American Publishing Company: F. G. Gilman & Co., Chicago, 1873.

Another copy, in leather, identical in every respect with the volume above except that it has illustration on p. 403. Laid in is a L. S. from P. K. Foley, dated Boston, Mass., May 13, 1902. "Since receiving your letter I have examined more carefully my copy of 'The Gilded Age' and find it answers in every particular the description which you give of yours. I wrote Mr. Clemens concerning it—but he can recall none of the circumstances attendant upon the first appearance of the book. I am going to Hartford some time next month and may have an opportunity to consult the publishers' books, which of course will show the date of publication and the number issued bearing the date 1873 are extant—with or without the cut, three that can be accounted for."

These two volumes would seem to settle the question as to there being issues of 1873 with and without the illustration on p. 403. They bear out Johnson's statement. It would be interesting to know just how many copies bearing date 1873 are extant—with or without the cut.

Very truly,

PURD B. WRIGHT,
Librarian.

Mother of all Living

By ROBERT KEABLE

Author of "Simon Called Peter"

The tide has turned! The book of broad appeal is outselling those which have been the sensational "best sellers" of recent years. Here is a novel of continuously thrilling episodes by the author of the most hotly discussed book of this year, "Simon Called Peter." It is distinguished by the same understanding, the same forceful presentment of primitive emotions, of character development, and by the same vivid word paintings. It is a novel with a difference which makes it stand out from all the novels of whose appeal to the senses alone we have become so tired. Restraint is no longer thrown to the winds. The tide has turned.

The Mother of all Living

by Robert Keable, the fearless delineator of love between man and woman, pictures the beauty and haunting charm of the remote regions of South Africa where the foothills of the vast Drakenberg lift their wide, wind-cooled spaces and pathless solitudes to the sun. Against a background of that mysterious land which calls out the great fundamental qualities, and the primitive instincts of men and women, he unravels a story of passion struggling with mother-love, of a woman who finds Happiness through the understanding of the deepest meaning of life for her sex.

Robert Keable in his own vivid, clear, forceful manner drives home his point. Even in the remote farms and native villages of unfrequented Africa, it is true that "not by bread alone can we live in this world and find happiness." The ties of civilization and society bind men and women together too closely for either to reach the goal of happiness along the road of selfishness and at the expense of unhappiness to the other. The keynote of this powerful story is motherhood, and through this to the goal of happiness. The trek of life takes tempted and tempting woman far; but she treks to save mother-love and to purge man's primitive passion.

The Mother of all Living

will be ready for publication between August 1 and 15

The price will be $2.00. The publishers feel warranted in urging you to place large advance orders, for beyond all question this is a big book.

WE all like, once in a while, to be transported back to the days of our youth, to re-live that happy period in the past when we took many things very seriously, but somehow never worried very long about them, when we knew almost nothing and thought we knew it all. No man or woman can read "Skippy Bedelle" without having that reminiscing mood aroused that brings a smile for each incident remembered. It is the joyous story of a sixteen-year-old Lawrenceville schoolboy, his sentimental progress from the urchin to the complete man of the world. Old friends, Hickey Hicks, Doc Macnooder, the Shad and others, you shall meet again; but chiefly this is the tale of Skippy and the female of the species, of the experiences that made him wise by disillusionment, so that he confided his sorrows to a diary which began: "What I don't know about women, ain't worth knowing. Resolved: if any loving is going to be done, they can do the loving." Anyone who was ever young will find Skippy and his friends of both sexes genuinely human and irresistibly funny.

SKIPPY BEDELLE

By

OWEN JOHNSON

Like "The Varmint," it will be one of the most popular books of its first season and a steady seller for many years afterwards. It's a book about boys and girls both, and will appeal to women as well as men.

Bonds

By Edward C. Lunt, M.A., Vice-President in charge of the Bonding Department,
The Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York;
Member of the New York

Men in positions of responsibility are frequently required either to give or receive a bond. This work therefore will have a wide sale to business executives, bankers, and lawyers, as well as to insurance underwriters.

For seventeen years the author has been in charge of the bonding department of his company. His book offers an easily readable but thoroughly comprehensive account of the whole subject. Among the numerous types of surety instruments which he analyzes are position fidelity bonds, bankers' blanket bonds, judicial or court bonds, contract bonds, license and permit bonds, etc., and a number of special classes. The tabular index of all recognized types of bonds, with authoritative notes as to the conditions under which they may be underwritten, is an exceptionally valuable feature.

Courage

By J. M. BARRIE

On May 3, J. M. Barrie was installed as rector of the ancient Scottish University of St. Andrews. He delivered a rectorial address whose like—in the opinion of the London Times—"can never before have been heard by any body of students." Dr. Frank Crane declares that it "rang around the world." It occupied a full page in British and American newspapers, but to-day you can't buy a copy of an issue containing it. The thousands of people who have been eagerly awaiting its publication in book form will welcome the announcement that it is now available, attractively bound in boards, at a price of 60 cents. The title is Courage.

THE AMERICANIZATION OF EDWARD BOK

We asked a bookseller to name his best-selling book for next fall, exclusive of fiction. He said: "No matter what the new books are, my best seller next fall will be the same as my best seller last fall and the fall before that. I mean The Americanization of Edward Bok. And in view of the fact that the book has just gone into its nineteenth printing, and orders are coming in as fast as ever, we know he's right. $3.00

THE FORSYTE SAGA

for the skeptics has been the unqualified success of John Galsworthy's The Forsyte Saga. It represented an experiment—the publishing in a single volume, as one continuous narrative, of three novels and two long stories which had all been published before. We printed what we thought would be a year's supply—three months later we find ourselves obliged to rush through another printing fully as large. Now the prediction is general that the Saga will have an even heavier sale in the holiday buying season. For it is recognized that here is a book which will live among the masterpieces of English fiction when other novels have gone over the falls to oblivion. $2.50

THE MINDS AND MANNERS OF WILD ANIMALS

Sooner or later

a book which already is selling briskly is going to take hold in a big way. We hear it from all sides: "One of the most interesting books ever published." Talk will make it a big seller, for it is making friends among readers of all ages and tastes. We refer to The Minds and Manners of Wild Animals, by W. T. Hornaday. It is already in its second printing. $2.50

Surely the one big ROMANCE of the Fall

By the Author of "The Sheik"

E. M. HULL

The SHADOW OF THE EAST

Mr. Bookseller:—

When you are figuring out your requirements for fall fiction, remember these points:

1. "The Sheik" has had a phenomenal sale, as you know.
2. Practically everyone of the thousands who read "The Sheik" found it as good as they had been told it was.
3. Therefore it is safe to predict that a very high percentage of the readers of "The Sheik" will "come back" for the second book by the same author.
4. When they do come back, they will find in THE SHADOW OF THE EAST just as gripping and heart-stirring a story as in "The Sheik," with an entirely different plot, but containing all the elements that made "The Sheik's" success inevitable.
5. Mrs. Hull's stories are not preachments or "problem novels," but genuine romance of the sort whose popularity is ages-old and not dependent on a passing fad.
6. The success of THE SHADOW OF THE EAST can hardly be a matter of speculation. Here is one big fall book whose sale is sure to equal that of its predecessor.
7. You can safely make your advance order for "The Shadow of the East" equal your total of "The Sheik."

Very truly yours,

Libraries and Publishing

ONE of the directions in which organized librarianship will gradually exert more and more influence as the time goes on is in the field of creative publishing, that is, in giving direction to publishing by suggestions supplied or by joint orders given in support of publishing plans of new books or in the reprinting of old. The possibility of such growth was one of the points suggested in comments made after the recent library convention by L. Stanley Jast, librarian of the Manchester, England, Public Library.

Mr. Jast felt that the time would come when the libraries would take more active interest in publishing enterprises. As an instance, he mentioned the fact that such a book as Leonardo Da Vinci's Notebooks was unobtainable in England for a great many years. He believed that it would have been possible and helpful for the librarians to have underwritten the publication of a book like this by giving indication of the number of orders that could be expected. It should also be possible he pointed out, in such cases for librarians not only to point out the need of a book of this kind, but to indicate the proper person for its editing.

Similar creative work might be done in fields where books are needed on subjects not fully covered. As was shown in a symposium printed in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY a year ago, the librarians are more likely to receive indication of the public's need for organized information in book form than are the publishers or booksellers. Such suggestions might lead to worthwhile publishing enterprises, and again, having developed the idea, the librarians, thru a proper committee, could suggest the best format and possibly the author. There are also many books which are still in print but the editions of which are unsatisfactory. In this case again, as the potential market for a great many copies, the librarians would have a chance to designate the best editing and format for their purposes.

In a limited way, all lists of books which come out in great numbers from the library sources do give important direction to libraries. The Bookshelf for Boys and Girls, edited as it is by two well-known librarians and by Mr. Mathiews, the chief scout librarian, gives constant direction to the reading interests of our American boys and girls.

In another field, a particularly interesting study of book interests is found in the new volume just published by the American Library Association, entitled "Graded List of Books for Children," prepared by the Elementary School Library Committee of the National Education Association. This book will be reviewed in more detail in a subsequent number of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY. It is a list of about eight hundred books for grade schools and will have a very marked influence on the buying of hundreds of school libraries and public libraries doing work with schools.

Besides the main list, there is printed a record of about fifty books which the editors have found out of print but which they would like to have put in the list. Such listing gives very direct impulse to the publishers to make it possible to put these volumes on future lists. Many of the titles here mentioned are of English manufacture, but might well be reprinted now in this country.

The fact that the library field is so well organized and has such good reason for keeping record of the public's interests and tastes, a record which cannot be kept in a bookstore, puts an important responsibility upon it in serving the general book interests in this way, and it seems quite possible that there will be future developments along this line.

A Salesman's Time

WITH the buying season for the book-trade year now well under way, statistics as to the cost of time taken by the selling operation are of special importance. A study of the average traveling salesman's time was recently made by a committee headed by Willard E. Freeland of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co.

This two-year survey made by time-study men accompanying salesmen found that 15% of their time was spent in actual selling, 10% in clerical work, 75% in walking and waiting. Every trade may do well in studying such facts and in seeing what can be done to make the time more productive.

One thing recommended during discussion of these figures at the convention was the importance of preliminary advertising of the product sold in the trade papers, in order that the selling time might be more profitable. Another important point is the full appreciation of the situation by the buyer.

The selling of goods thru traveling men has proved the most economical method of distribution so far devised, but if greater care can increase the efficiency of this method an undoubted betterment of total distributing costs will be made.

The Historical Novel

HERE and there people are predicting that the historical novel is coming back. Like styles in dress, the general trend of public opinion can never be accurately prophesied, but there are straws that seem to show that the wind may at some not too far distant day blow more strongly from that quarter. Every bookseller who was in business twenty years ago will remember what a place the historical novel had in his sales at that time, when "Richard Carvel," "To Have and to Hold" and "Hugh Wynne" were at the top of the list.

Probably the thing that will do most to bring this type of fiction back is to have someone do it well. A few books in the past year have brought high commendation, and the question is whether the headway thus reached will find a public with increased appetite for romance. Certainly the situation has passed which existed ten years ago, when people turned away from historical novels with a shrug, saying "I have had enough of cut and thrust for now."

Rotogravure Publicity

THE use of rotogravure for book advertising, which has been so successfully experimented with by Grosset & Dunlap and others, is again interestingly displayed in a circular just issued by the Macmillan Company. This circular on recent books gives portraits of authors and also photographs of a score or more of the books themselves.

It is interesting to note again here with what clearness and effect this form of printing reproduces book jackets,—the photographed book seems like a real volume standing out from the page. Even the reproductions of those books which have no decorative jackets stand out with good effect.

Prepayment to Canada Canceled

THE American Railway Express Company rescinded June 15 the rule requiring the prepayment of charges on shipments to Canada and restored the "collect" privilege. After that date, the shipper can ship "prepaid" or "collect," as he prefers.

The prepayment rule has been in effect since April 1, 1920. It was invoked to protect the carrier against loss due to the high rate of exchange between the United States and Canada, which at times has reached 20 per cent.

Improved financial conditions have brought the discount rate down to approximately 1 per cent. In taking this action, however, the express company stands to lose approximately $25,000 a year in transferring funds collected at destination points in Canada, to depositaries in the United States.

The repayment requirements will be dropped for the benefit of shippers, many of whom ship to Canada "f.o.b. factory," and the carrier will stand the loss in exchange instead of the shipper. It is the usual practice for the Canadian purchaser to pay the transportation charges on goods imported from the States, rather than to settle with the American manufacturer thru invoice on goods.

A New Periodical Agency

ARTHUR E. TURNER of New York, connected with the Franklin Square Agency since its beginning and for ten years its manager, has organized the Turner Subscription Agency, Inc., now doing business at 30 Irving Place. Mr. Turner is well known among booksellers, having made fifteen consecutive annual trips from coast to coast soliciting the trade of booksellers. He holds that a substantial portion of the $100,000,000 spent for periodicals in this country should go thru the hands of the book-trade. The war period, post-war conditions, printers' strikes, the raising of the prices of periodicals, delays in the filling of subscriptions, all united to make the handling of periodicals bothersome and of little profit for a long period. These conditions have been changing and he predicts a period of good business and fair profits which booksellers cannot afford to ignore.

Russian Ruble Paradox

ACCORDING to a copy of the Russian journal Ekonomitsc-Heskaia Zizu, the editors offer a month's subscription for 1,200,000 rubles. For a two months' subscription the price is 3,000,000 rubles. The apparent paradox is explained by a note saying that the difference in price for the first and second months' subscription is due to the estimated depreciation of the ruble in the next four weeks.

Booklists as a Publicity Medium

By Joseph L. Wheeler

Librarian, Youngstown Public Library

IN a previous article the "Home Reading Courses" issued by the U. S. Bureau of Education were briefly described from the point of view of the book-trade.* A more recent development in this field is the inauguration of a series of reading courses by the American Library Association, briefer, more attractive than the government courses, of equal professional authority, but without provision for any supervision or credits for the reading done. The first two courses, on Journalism and on Accounting, have met with instant success. The introductory text, the selection of books and the comments upon each book, are the work of well-known specialists, and the young man who picks up one of these handy size circulars will be impressed with the quality of the suggestions he finds.

Reading courses such as these, similar courses from the University of Illinois, likewise the old familiar Chatauqua Home Reading Circle idea, are interesting to dealers and publishers, if only for their recognition of the vast uncultivated fields of "adult education" and the almost negligible effort that has so far been made to encourage adult reading and study on a large scale. "Adult education," far from meaning formal class instruction, particularly if limited to working people as the term is used in England, rather implies all the forces at work to induce self-instruction among those who are past the school age.

This nation might lay claim to having the largest proportion of citizens who read and think for themselves. Proof and disproof of such a statement would make an interesting chapter in a book on American civilization.

At all events the field of adult education thru books, remains largely undeveloped in spite of publishers, dealers and libraries.

While awaiting the time when the Government or some professional and non-commercial organization, like the American Library Association, shall create a national propaganda to encourage constructive reading and study, the publishers, dealers, libraries, and various organizations interested in specific subjects, will continue to prepare and distribute booklists. It is not impossible that all of them, working together, may develop some plan for such a wide spread campaign in which the finances will come from the book-trade, the professional authority from a group of outstanding specialists, the backing of disinterested public service from some such organization as the A. L. A., and the channels of distribution thru a myriad of special organizations and the public press. Compared with such a project the Year Round Book Selling Plan is at a distinct disadvantage in being obviously a trade undertaking.

Imagine for a moment the effect of the public announcement in press dispatches and full page advertising, that the U. S. Bureau of Education, or the American Library Association, had organized a vast movement to provide free expert advice for every man and woman who wishes to study on any subject—that Edison has prepared a course of reading on Electricity, another on Radio; Burbank on Gardening; Bok on Writing for the Magazines; Mayo Brothers on Good Health; President Harding on Our American Government; Uncle Joe Cannon, or Beveridge, on Practical Politics;

Dave Griffith on Movie Writing and Acting; and so on. That these courses provide a groundwork for any who follow them carefully. That copies can be had at any book-to be not only "out-of-luck" in his future career, but what is much worse to the ordinary person, to be out-of-style.

As a preliminary to or in lieu of any such "pipe dream," a study might well be made into the use of booklists and circulars as a means to incite people to read, in terms of purposes, methods, costs and results. A vast amount of money, time, expert opinion, is being spent in this direction at present. All of it is useful to some degree.

The Home Reading Courses issued at Washington, described in the previous article, for example, are notable in several respects. Yet they fall far short of the results they might achieve, because certain features of publicity and distribution have been overlooked. The Federal Government, involved in a certain amount of precedent, red-tape, and delay, is hardly in a position to become an advertising agency even in so good a cause as Home Study. The efforts of the Home Education Division to issue its courses at the psychological moment, in the most attractive style, and with the necessary accompaniment of publicity and effective distribution, have not yet (in the writer's mind) met with anything like complete success, on account of official handicaps laid down by Congressional Printing Committees, the Government Printing Office, and other officials who dictate expenditures and rules.

Unquestionably the booklist, in various forms, is the chief medium for carrying book publicity—the publishers' lists of new publications, and the libraries' lists by subjects, coming first in importance. The publisher's announcement, being in the nature of a news bulletin to the trade and hence sure of immediate attention needs little of visual appeal other than dignified and appropriate typography, including headings and titles in bold face type to give emphasis and variety to the pages. The publishers' circulars to the ultimate bookbuyer, however, present a great variety. Some very charming slips and folders advertising single books, will come to mind, for the simple beauty of type, border, an occasional ornament or line drawing. All these features impress themselves favorably upon any who notice such things.

Of larger pamphlet lists an increasing proportion carry some well-chosen cover design or illustration, and more thought is being given to an informal and arresting title. The Macmillan List for Boys and Girls, for instance, with its fascinating drawing of the Pied Piper, store or library. That at no time has any nation had the craze for reading and study as America has it just now. Finally that anyone who passes up this golden opportunity is certain secures an attentive perusal upon a first glance at the cover. The inside pages are not less successful. Type face of one design but varying sizes (note the readable annotations in 6-point), generous white space, and the use of one or two drawings on each page, have all been thought out, and the catalog is consequently worthy of being kept for some time and looked over by all the members of the family. That such a catalog leads to larger sales seems a logical idea. But any figures as to such result are almost impossible to secure.

Indeed costs in book publicity must continue to be a vague and indefinite element in the problem. This does not lead to the conclusion that a publisher or dealer is saving money by cheap printing. After analysing the exact purpose of a piece of publicity—whom it is aimed at, in what mood or tone the prospect is to be approached, whether the list is to be short or long—and then after many hours of skilled experience and labor have gone into the selection of titles, and as much more into the annotations (which appeal powerfully to those whose eyes reach the book-titles inside), after all this planning and editing, in other words, it seems logical that the whole investment should not fall short of becoming effective thru some small percentage of printing economy. This is especially true of the front cover, from which the prospect forms his first mental attitude toward the list. A few extra cents per copy, expended in such a cover as the Macmillan list carries, may prove the most essential item in the entire cost-schedule.

An interesting contrast in physical appeal is offered by the three book lists shown here. All have a similar purpose, and each was prepared and issued by some "group" organization, as against similar lists which might have been published by any individual library or school. This latter fact would lead us to expect a product of extra-high quality. The first, an excellent list of "American History in Fiction," published by the New England School Library Association, marks a long step in the development of school library service, for it shows the desire of school librarians to forego any false pride or self-sufficiency, and their wish to take advantage of the good work which their colleagues are doing and make it available to their pupils. It is in no spirit of criticism, that the cover design of this list is shown here, for it is somewhat typical of a large proportion of booklists issued by schools and libraries, but rather to suggest the greater appeal it would have made to the average pupil if, for example, it had been printed in handy size instead of $5\frac{1}{2} \times 12$ inches; if the border could have been lighter in its design and in harmony with the cross lines; if an ornament more appropriate to books than to music had been handy. The real point here is, would it have paid the various school libraries which hand this list to their pupils in the hope of encouraging them to read some of these good books, to use a cover design in which these elements of typography and display were correct, that would rivet attention on the purpose of the list and arouse the desire to look inside it? There is only one answer. The second example is a similar list, containing many of the same titles, but prepared for adults and distributed by the Good Citizenship Bureau of a popular magazine. As a librarian who has thought that libraries pay too little attention to the appearance of their booklists, this six page folder was awaited with great interest on the assumption that, coming from a magazine whose publicity, business and editorial, is highly developed, it would put any similar library list "in the shade." Just the contrary proved the case, for excellent tho the text may be, the appearance is far from what is needed to secure the largest reading of these books, and typographically the list is mediocre and confusing.

The third example is a more extended list issued at about the same time by the American Library Association. This is one of several lists prepared originally by some $35 was spent to provide the cover design for this pamphlet and the two color plates. The lettering appears in white on a bright orange background. The drawing, in black, was borrowed from an advertisement in a technical magazine. On an edition of 2000 copies this visual appeal cost about 1½ cents per copy over the expense of the usual type-set cover. In the writer's mind such an in-local library and then reprinted by the Association for the use of all. Its cover design, tho including no illustration, fulfils every requirement of good taste in printing. The style of "entry" inside (the method of setting up author, title, publisher and annotation) is the most successful yet developed—the same as that used in the Booklist of the American Library Association.

Contrast with these the appeal made by the list of Books on the Industries of one city, issued by its Public Library. An extra vestment is very much worth while because it does compel attention among a class of men who have not been accustomed to think of a public library as a "service station" for their use.

But it is the book-trade itself which has created the most satisfactory and successful example of co-operation and also of visual appeal in booklists. This is the annual "Bookshelf for Boys and Girls." No single publisher, dealer, or library, can hope to produce so nearly a perfect publicity medium as this and the wonder is that the same plan has not been followed out in a hundred other directions. Prominently featuring the selection of titles by three disinterested specialists, the text shows a care in choice and annotation which places it almost above criticism.

Each page is made attractive by reproductions which serve several useful purposes both as advertising and as information. The cover designs are certain to hold attention and each year shows an improvement in the quality of the art work. In fact the contents deserve a cover design by a Franklin Booth or Wyeth or Smith. This annual list, so helpful to those who wish to sell or lend books, has undoubtedly had already a vast influence in directing boys and girls and their parents and friends away from the cheap and insipid among juvenile books, toward those volumes whose acquaintance will do something to mould the lives and thought of the next generation.

English Book-Trade News

(From Our London Correspondent)

A COLUMNIST in the London Evening Standard says:

"Booksellers are looking forward to a very big sale of cheap editions this summer, and the publishers concerned are seeing to it that their stocks are full, while the seaside bookshops are calling for good supplies of popular fiction in this particular form.

'The public would be astonished,' a publisher remarked to me, 'if they knew the aggregate total reached during the course of the two or three months' summer season by the sea; and bearing in mind the exceedingly high cost of production, which is everything up to 300 per cent over pre-war level, it is amazing that these books on the market at the price are such excellent examples of typography on sound paper and with adequate binding.

"Apart from this side of publishing and book-selling, non-fiction (to perpetuate an abominable noun) is doing extremely well. Brisk business is being done with 'The Prime Ministers of Britain,' 'The Real Tzaritsa,' 'Zimmern's, 'Europe in Convalescence,' Coleridge's 'Letters to My Grandson,' and 'Painted Windows.'

A very excellent address was given in London a day or so since on the "Business of Book-selling" by Mr. G. B. Bowes, M. A., of Cambridge.

King's and Clare Colleges have offered to sell about seven acres of land on which to erect a new library for Cambridge University. The lease of part of the property is up in three years' time.

Twenty-five thousand copies of John Drinkwater's plays and poems have been sold in England in less than a year. A fine record and a splendid proof that the best is often the best seller.

Recent best sellers include:

The last lecture of the Society of Bookmen has just been given: a moving picture exhibition entitled "The Making of a Book." The previous five addresses were "The New Reading Public" by Sidney Dark (Editor) "Book Publicity," by J. G. Wilson (bookseller) and Michael Sadler (author of "Privilege"), "Are Book Prices Too Cheap?" by C. S. Evans (of Messrs Heinemann)—Ian Hay in the chair, "The Business of Bookselling" by G. B. Bowes, M. A., of Cambridge, with W. B. Maxwell as chairman. The moving picture of "The Making of a book" was explained by that very able printer Cecil Clay, while Viscount Burnham (Daily Telegraph) made some interesting remarks. The whole series of lectures was spontaneously successful, and the lectures always had a crowded audience. The Bookmen are to be warmly congratulated on their efforts to educate the public, and it is to be hoped that they will arrange a similar series of lectures this fall.

Marshal Joffre Honors Barr Ferree

AT a luncheon given Marshal Joffre in New York this spring by The Pennsylvania Society, an unexpected incident was the presentation to Barr Ferree, Secretary of the Society, of the rare book on the consecration of Louis XV, entitled "Le Sacre de Louis XV, Roy de France et de Navarre dans l'Eglise de Reims, le Dimanche 25 Octobre, 1722." This book is not often found in private collections. The Library Company of Philadelphia has no copy nor has the Boston Public Library. There is a copy in the Widener Library at Harvard, and in several of the great art libraries in New York.

Bookselling in Japan

By Hugh Byas

Managing Editor, The Japan Advertiser, Tokyo

IN a bird's-eye view of the book-trade in Japan two features leap to the eye, as our French friends say. One is the large number of book-stores; the other is the astonishing number of shops which deal in second-hand books printed in English or some other foreign language. To a book-lover one of the sights of Tokyo is the street in Kanda (the Latin Quarter) where for almost half a mile second-hand book stores, small and large, stand side by side. Not Charing Cross Road in London nor the Quais in Paris offers such an array of books that have changed hands before and propose to continue the process. In this long line, I should say there are over a hundred book-stores. Only two are exclusively devoted to the sale of new books (Japanese) and one to new books in English, German and French. The others carry stocks of old books ranging from a few hundreds to many thousands of volumes. While in every case the majority of those books are in Japanese, there are few shops that do not deal in English-language books as well. The student quarter is the center of the trade, but similar stores are found in every district. It is rare to find a shopping street anywhere without its store dealing solely in old books.

The trade meaning of this state of affairs I must leave to experts; I can only offer the evidence of a book-lover who has spent many a pleasant hour on many a Sunday morning browsing among the shelves at Kanda. I think it cannot be disputed that the existence of such a large body of small traders living by the sale of second-hand books indicates an unusually wide taste for reading. But before rushing to the conclusion that the Japanese are a super-literate nation, you must allow for the following considerations (1) that apparently no English language book in Japan ever goes to the pulping vat; (2) that a shop-keeper will give a worthless book shelf-room for 20 years sooner than sell it without his profit; (3) that many of the second-hand books are students' text books which seem to pass from generation to generation; (4) that many of those stores are one-horse affairs. When all deductions are made it is impossible not to be impressed with the fact that Japan is buying and selling, and re-buying and re-selling a vast quantity of books in foreign languages. English comes first to the extent of probably 90 per cent, with German, French and Russian following in the order named.

The business involved in the production and sale of books in Japanese is a closed world to the foreigner, but one can see enough of it to be confirmed in the impression that the Japanese have a natural literary bent. The best known Japanese publishing house has extensive offices in the heart of the city and a factory covering many acres and equipped with up-to-date machinery. Cheapness is important and the majority of books appear in gaudy paper covers and are printed on a poor quality of paper. But when a fine format is called for the Japanese printer is equal to the occasion. That format still speaks of a time when literature went with leisure and when the printed word was a thing to be carefully treasured. The book hand stitched, is enclosed in detachable boards covered with linen or silk, which clasp over it like a purse and are secured with ivory pegs. The title and an introductory motto or announcement may be faithfully reproduced from the brush of some famous calligraphist, and the publisher's personal seal will be stamped in red ink by hand on each copy. The tendency is to produce books now in ordinary Western style, with cloth boards.

The crop of literary magazines is enormous, and tho the way is strewn with the wreckage of past attempts, capital seems always forthcoming for new ventures. It has to be added that not much capital is required. Publishers' announcements occupy considerable space in the daily papers, usually on the front page.

The sale of foreign books to Japanese readers is largely in the hands of one Japanese firm, the Maruzen Co., sometimes called the Brentano's of Japan. Tho you must remember that the comparison is between a boy and a man, this one is more justifiable than some other attempts to find Western analogies for things Japanese. The chief store of the company, situated in the best part of Tokyo's principal street, offers a well-displayed and classified assortment of modern books in English, German, French and other languages. The estimate already given of the relative proportions of English and other foreign language books will hold good here, tho in order to make up for the break caused by the war period, this store recently opened a large German section. Between 20 and 30 catalogs are issued in which the books stocked are listed according to subjects. These catalogs correspond with the arrangement of the stock.

The store has become a kind of resort; it is always crowded by people who wish to see the new books or to pass an idle half hour looking for something that may take their fancy. And this large business with a first-class store in Tokyo and branches in every city of Japan is practically entirely devoted to the sale of books in a foreign language.

English Reaction to Bookselling Slogans

HAROLD FORRESTER, writing in the London Book-Post, comments on American bookselling slogans, analyzing the psychology of the British buyer. Mr. Forrester gives as the notable characteristics of the British bookbuyer, a sense of duty and a sense of thrift. He can be appealed to thru these instincts and thru reason, but the Briton will not be commanded and he will not do anything the mob is apt to do.

Mr. Forrester offers for the consideration of the British book-trade slogans which would be more alluring to the British book buyer than the American slogans "Buy a Book a Week" and "Take Along a Book." These are too commanding for the British temper. To the American bookman following Mr. Forrester's argument it seems as if the value of the rhythm of the American slogans as a persuasive force had been overlooked. He commends their brevity but he does not seem to consider the cumulative effect of a slogan that because it is short and musical can be frequently used and so have an increasing force. To American ears, "Take Along a Book" is more persuasive than dogmatic, it is the conclusion of a syllogism, whose premises might be there will be dull and rainy days in camp, a book can relieve the monotony of such days, therefore, Take Along a Book. Mr. Forrester's substitutes seem to us no more persuasive and seem more like supplements to a ringing campaign slogan; they are only for occasional use and, therefore, do not have cumulative force.

Seventy-eight years ago an American invented a campaign slogan "Fifty-four, forty or fight!" It helped to elect a president tho the boundary was established at the forty-ninth parallel. There was such power, however, in the alliterative slogan that it turns up to-day in the sub-conscious memory even of Englishmen, and Stephen Graham, in his new book "Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies," describes his crossing the northern boundary of Montana (49° N.) as the crossing of "fifty-four forty."

Mr. Forrester's article says:

"Tho we have, in sorrow as well as in some anger, given up hope that the combined forces of the publishers and booksellers in this country will start a publicity campaign like their brothers in America we are still watching closely the progress of the movement there. One may assume that all are not taking an equal share in the work, but it appears that a large majority is throwing itself wholeheartedly into the boosting of books and that its efforts are meeting with a great deal of success. There is something in the American temperament which makes the individual keen to act as part of a mob, in this case a not riotous one, which is lacking on this side of the Atlantic. In the main we dislike crowds, and prefer to act on our own. It is this difference which calls for the employment of other methods if we do decide some day to start a Book Boosting Campaign here.

This unique phenomenon is explained by the fact that English is a compulsory subject in all higher-grade schools, and is rapidly becoming the second language of the Japanese educated class. There seems to be opportunity here for American publishers, and whether big or small the market is a growing one.

"Their appeals, excellent as they are, will not suit either us or our public. We cannot be driven by exclamatory instruction to 'Take Along a Book' or to 'Buy a Book a Week.' These have the merit of brevity, but they contain no apparent appeal to our reasoning. For us there must be argument if ever so little. We were weighed up some years ago by 'Saki' in one of his delightful books of satire, where he points out that we English will not do things for pleasure, but can be made to do them out of a sense of duty. Duty, then, must be one appeal. The other, for only one other appeal is necessary, must be the appeal of profit. It is required for the strain of Scottish or Yorkshire blood that is in most of us. A careful blending of these two elements might turn the entire nation into a race of bookbuyers.

"Suppose, for instance, we wish to encourage the reading of Shakespeare. It would be useless to issue cards with the legend 'BUY A COPY OF SHAKESPEARE' or 'TAKE SHAKESPEARE HOME.' These have too much of the command about them to suit us. What would have a better chance would be a card like this:

NOW THAT YOU HAVE SEEN
SHAKESPEARE AS HE ISN'T
WHY NOT READ HIM AS HE IS?

"This would appeal to every man who has been to a present-day production of a Shakespeare play and would in addition, be sure of much gratuitous notice from men like Bernard Shaw and St. John Ervine.

"And while we are talking of plays, a card like this would appeal to thousands:

YOUR STALL COST YOU 10/6
AND THE PLAY WAS POOR.
WHY NOT TRY A NOVEL?
IT CAN'T BE WORSE
AND IT COSTS ONLY 7/6.

"It may, of course, be objected that the play may not always be poor, to which one can only reply that the bill should be removed that week and put back for the remaining fifty-one.

"See how the idea would apply in the case of fiction. There are still many, apart from the small number in the North of Scotland, who hold that novels are a snare of the Devil, who read no fiction unless it be a Daily Mirror serial. They live in an unhealthy state of nervous tension while waiting for 'To-morrow's splendid instalment.' We should be doing the nation a service if we made an effort to get these people to give up this 'snack' form of reading. They should be taught that the best way to read a story is to make a meal of it. Let us try something like this:

WHY WAIT FOR TO-MORROW?

BUY A NOVEL TO-DAY.

READ THE LAST CHAPTER FIRST AND THE REST WHEN YOU LIKE.

"And this might suit the business man who has 'no time for fiction':

WHY READ THE 'DAILY SNARE'?

OUR FICTION IS BETTER

"And this might convert thousands if brought out at once:

LET YOUR BOOK BILL GO UP.

"I throw out these suggestions in no serious mood. I do not expect that they will be taken up, even by individual booksellers. But I have one eye on the next Booksellers' Conference. Last year Book-Post gave its columns to a serious discussion of the question of Co-operative Advertising, and the tea did not get cold while the Conference was discussing it. This year it may be that a purely frivolous suggestion may have better luck."

The Age of Little Books

EDWIN VALENTINE MITCHELL'S Book Notes in an article on "Portable Literature" analyzes this as an age of travel and therefore an Age of Little Books.

"The reading public has grown suddenly larger, and books must therefore grow smaller," this article says: "We are coming to see that a good book need not be long, that it need not be weighty in a double sense. We are discovering the artistic delight of packing much riches in a little room.

"To no small degree, the public demanding the smaller books of today and tomorrow is composed of commercial travellers and business men. Twenty years ago these readers had no other literary resource than the newspaper. Today you may see one of them, as he takes his seat in the Pullman coach, drag a small edition of Epictetus or Shakespeare or Omar Khayyám from his hip-pocket, read a page or so, and then sit for mile after mile of his journey with a far-away gaze. One may ask what good he gets from a book which he only glances at. It has set him on some long and winding trail of thought or fancy which he would never have found without its help. It has been a spring-board from which he has leapt out of the grinding present into a more romantic past or into the misty future. It has been for him a magic carpet floating him away from the dust and uproar of his time and place. . . . A folio would have been a burden. His duodecimo is as good as wings.

"The end has probably not yet come in this steady reduction of the size of books. When we are all travelers, whether commercial or sentimental, when every man owns his private aeroplane, when one can breakfast in London and have dinner in New York, we shall not even then cease to read. Or if we do, then what's the good of aeroplanes? Of the making of books, and of their constant adjustment to social and economic change, there is no end. We may confidently expect that in that day the crown octavo will be as extinct a monster as the board-bound folio seems to us. On the shelf which now holds fifty volumes we shall then put five hundred. Dropping down the river in a canoe one will be able to carry a full cargo of fiction, history, and verse without crowding the duffel.

"The effects of this change upon literature itself will be almost entirely for good. Not all of the necessary reduction in the size of books can be made by the publishers alone, even with the use of thinner papers and lighter bindings. Authors will be called upon to write chapters where they now write whole volumes, and paragraphs where they now write chapters. They must learn to trim, to prune, to condense. The most successful writers of this good day coming on will not strive to put forth half a million words per year but to pack more matter into fifty thousand words. It is not beyond hoping that they may be paid not by the number of words but by the number and value of their thoughts. Anything that hastens this event, so devoutly to be desired, will be a good thing for literature."

An Uncorrected Galley

STEEL ENGRAVINGS

VS. PHOTOGRAPHS

"What has become of the good-looking authors" asked a correspondent to the New York Times. "Everybody, of course, admits that writers of to-day are the greatest ever, but why must they look as they do? Never before has authorship been so identified with homeliness. Shelley, Byron, Keats, Goethe were famed for their beauty. Shakespeare, Tennyson, Longfellow, Bryant, Whitman—to name but a few—all of the 'good, gray poet' school, were pleasing to look upon. The sterner type of writing face, showing the square, strength of neck and shoulders (Balzac, Cellini, Howells and Roosevelt had it), is attractive. Even the confessedly plain—typified by Socrates, Rabelais, Franklin, Scott and Thackeray, have their own charm of countenance. But take a glance at most of the faces that are producing our literature to-day, and what have we?"

GROOMING THE GROOMS.

Frederick Melcher thinks—and we hope he is right—that the June bride is as keen on fitting out her book shelf as on filling her hope chest. We think we have found the father of the literary bride, pictured in a recent ad for "the five-foot shelf." He is a terrifying old gentleman, strangely resembling a saber-toothed tiger—clad in soup and fish. He sits in his library, fixing with his glittering eye a young man who sags forward in his chair, the picture of dejection. The legend reads—"Some day he will ask you, 'WHAT HAVE YOU READ?'"

Undoubtedly the young man is a would-be June bridegroom, whom papa has met with a wholly unexpected question. He seems a clean-cut youngster, neat, presentable, with hair slicked back and coat of college cut. One recognizes a live wire, with a tidy bank account, who had every reason to face such an interview with confidence. And now he registers abject despair. You cannot but feel sorry for him. He does not look as if he had read anything, and even if he has, the old tartar does not seem one to be satisfied with anything short of Dr. Eliot's five-foot shelf.

It hardly seems fair for this sort of thing to be sprung on the young folks without warning. Surely it is up to Mr. Melcher and other bookmen to get together with a committee of June brides and their papas and fix a minimum requirement for bridegrooms. What we need is a benedict's book-shelf.

KEITH PRESTON, in the Chicago Daily News.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM LYON PHELPS, introducing E. A. Robinson as candidate for an honorary degree at Yale recently said: "In an age of self-advertising, where many prefer notoriety to obscurity and would rather draw attention by any means than remain unknown, Mr. Robinson has invariably permitted his poems to speak for themselves. He has won fame not by discords, but by singing in tune better than any one else. He is generally regarded to-day as America's foremost living poet."

DODD, MEAD & Co. will publish, instead of "The Rectory Family," which had been announced for fall publication, "Pippin," a new novel by Archibald Marshall which he had started some time ago, but had temporarily put aside.

A BRONZE TABLET on an oak tree planted last year was unveiled on the anniversary of his birth, June 22, in memory of Alan Seeger by the Writers' Club. The tree stands in front of No. 61 Washington Square South, where have lived Seeger, O. Henry, Frank Norris, Robert W. Chambers, Stephen Crane, and Gelett Burgess. It is a four-story red brick house with two attic windows on the roof and a Colonial door facing the worn stone steps on which the celebrities gathered of evenings. The memorial tablet, sent here from Paris by the poet's father, Charles Louis Seeger, reads:

ARTHUR E. ROBERTS is known for a good many different things—for his knowledge and love of boys, for the unusual library at his scout camp, for his work as executive of the Cincinnati Boy Scouts, and for originating the Roberts' Graded Plan for Caddie Instruction. His volume, "The Emancipation of Youth," has just been published by Revell.

COSMO HAMILTON's "The Rustle of Silk" was published in England the end of June. The English publisher, to advertise the book, organized a party of fifty sandwichmen who marched every day for a week thru the West End in the fashionable shopping district and at night formed a gigantic moving circle around the Nelson monument in Trafalgar Square.

BURROWS BROTHERS CO. MAKES FRONTAGE COUNT

Using Lost Display Space

WITH rentals what they are on Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, it is not at all surprising that the Burrows Bros. Co. desires to use every possible method to make its frontage count. The building is of the heavy bank building type, and the two display windows are not sufficient in capacity to present all the different aspects of this business. The display department, of which John J. Bell is manager, worked out a plan for turning the entrance room into display use during the evening. The accompanying photograph shows the arrangement that has been worked out. The display is not a makeshift counter hastily erected. There are two cabinets, each the full length and width of the door, which swing on hinges in the vestibule. During the day these cabinets are apparently parts of the side walls of the vestibule, but when the doors are locked for the night, the cabinets are swung back, the platform is let down and a covering is placed upon it. In a few minutes an effective display can be arranged. Built beside these cabinets in the entrance space are two glassed-in display racks, which add life and interest to the vestibule during the day with colorful displays of reading cards, etc. Such displays become especially valuable when stores are on a street where there is much passing at night, and other merchants may find value in the suggestion.

"TIMOTHY'S QUEST," that permanent classic for children which, with "The Birds' Christmas Carol," has made Kate Douglas Wiggin a household name thruout the country, is to be adapted to the movies this summer.

THE UNCLE REMUS Memorial Association has decided to purchase "Snap-Bean Farm," part of the home site of Joel Chandler Harris. The farm adjoins the "Wren Nest," the house in which the famous author lived when he wrote many of his stories.

American and European Bookshops

"COMES now A. A. Kroch," says the Chicago Daily News, "back from a tramp thru the bookshops of Europe—Tottenham Court road, Leipzigerstrasse, Boul. St. Michel, Ringstrasse—and tells us, in effect, first that a fine time was had, so to speak; furthermore, that American bookshops are far superior to those of London in point of stock carried and service; that the Germans are wide awake and active but that their literature is unripe, misdirected, getting nowhere; that Vienna is dead artistically; that the French, elated by their victory, have become as ego-centric in bookmaking as in politics and look only into their mirror and let the rest of the world go hang; that no one abroad knows or cares anything about American books, and that none of the bookshops has the comprehensive American plan of merchandising books in large quantities effectively; that browsing in London is likely to be useless, for the bookstores have been combed over carefully and "finds" that have escaped the dealer's eye are now rare—what you get, you pay well for."

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

THE first catalog from the Centaur Book Shop, 1224 Chancellor Street, Philadelphia, has made its appearance. It contains 315 lots, mainly modern first editions of American and English authors that have been much in demand during the last two or three years.

The Daniel copy of the First Folio of Shakespeare, bought by the Rosenbach Company at the recent sale of the library of the late Baroness Burdett-Coutts, with the casket made for the famous volume and presented to the Baroness by Queen Victoria, has been sold to Henry C. Folger of this city.

The two volumes of the writing of Herman Melville in prose and verse to be published by the Princeton University Press in the autumn is to contain short articles and fugitive pieces, many taken from back numbers of Putnam's and Harper's Magazines of the Civil War period and now published in book form for the first time. These volumes will accordingly be of interest to collectors of the first editions of Melville.

A further portion of the library of the late Charles Fairfax Murray of London and Florence, including an extensive collection of fine bindings of English, French and Italian workmanship, many from celebrated libraries with owners' devices or armorial bearings, early printed books from famous Italian presses, a representative series of works by the most eminent Italian authors, finely illustrated books and early editions of the Greek and Latin classics will be sold at Sotheby's in London July 17, 18, 19 and 20.

The New York Historical Society is going to begin a drive for $1,000,000 next autumn to complete the north and south wings of the building owned and occupied by the society at 76th Street and Central Park West. The plans for the drive will be announced in the society's next Bulletin. The New York Historical Society houses in its buildings documents and relics of priceless value. It is felt that there will be ample support for the society's care of its treasures and for proper expansion if its needs are made clear to the people of this city.

Edmund Gosse, discussing the fine work of Montague Summers in his studies of the Restoration period in the London Times, says that "when I think of the bookshops which I haunted forty years ago, to be told by the bookseller that he had 'just destroyed a mass of Restoration plays because they took up so much room and none of my customers will look at them,' I am amazed at the present vogue for first editions of Dryden and Wycherly."

There is no need to abandon hope of further discovery of documents relating to Shakespeare, or indeed any of the early English authors, according to the report of Sir Sidney Lee at the annual meeting of the Trustees and Guardians of Shakespeare's Birthplace at Stratford recently. Sir Sidney Lee said that during the past year the trustees had bought a few valuable deeds bearing on the history of Shakespeare's family or on the families of his neighbors, but in this regard they were chiefly indebted to the generosity of Lord Willoughby de Broke, who had presented to them a unique collection of 288 early deeds and documents relating to Shakespeare's native town. In urging that others that come into the possession of such old deeds and documents should follow this example, Sir Sidney Lee doubtless had in mind the possibilities now resulting from the disposal of ancestral homes and the breaking up of estates and libraries which is a feature of our time often to be regretted.

Only a few year ago, as soon as the warm days of June came, the bottom dropped out of the auction market. The sales in May and June were of little importance, interest declined, prices dropped, and the season ended in a state of collapse. For four or five years there has been nothing of the sort. The end of the season has been planned as carefully as the beginning. Great care has been taken to stop at a point where business could be resumed again in confidence and enthusiasm. When the announcement of occasional summer sales would be held by the Heartman Auction Company at Perth Amboy, N. J., it seemed like a risky experiment. On June 22 a sale consisting of selections from several consignments, numbering 389 lots, and realizing $3,080 took place, and, all things considered, Mr. Heartman may feel very well pleased with the results. What was lacking in attendance was made up in mail orders, for collectors and librarians seemed alive to the opportunity. This one session sale consisted of books and pamphlets relating to the French and Indian War, the North American Indians, the early West, Lincolniana, broadsides, autograph letters and miscellaneous material. A few of the items and the prices which they brought were the following: A. D. S. by Charles Thomson, Secretary of the Continental Congress, 4 pp. folio, October 2, 1778, an important resolution of the Continental Congress unrecorded by Evans or Ford, $105; A. D. S. 1 p. signed by Tim Prout, December 14, 1773, to the Moderator of the Town Meeting held at Fanueil Hall, relating to the destruction of tea in Boston Harbor, $51; The Charleston Mercury Extra, December 20, 1860, containing the first report of the secession of South Carolina and the dissolution of the Union, $105; broadside containing a resolution of the House of Delegates of Maryland urging the construction of a railroad across the Continent of North America on the ground that it would facilitate our own intercourse with the far West and tend to consolidate the Union, $71; J. Benjamin Franklin's "A Cheap Trip to the Great Salt Lake City," 8vo, wrappers, Ipswich, circa 1854, $51; broadside containing directions for the Deputy Postmasters, for keeping their accounts, by Benjamin Franklin, Postmaster General of the Colonies, Philadelphia, 1753, rare and unrecorded, written by Franklin and published by Franklin and Hall, $114; "A Letter from William Shirley, Esq., Governor of Massachusetts, to His Grace, the Duke of Newcastle: with a Journal of the Siege of Louisbourg . . . approved and attested by Sir William Pepperel and other Principal Officers who commanded in the said expedition," 8vo, morocco, Boston, 1746, rare Boston edition, 1746, $106; Jonathan Dickenson's "The Shipwreck and Dreadful Sufferings of William Barrows and others . . . amongst the inhuman cannibals of Florida," 12m, boards, Salem, O., 1826, rare issue of this Indian captivity, $103; Charles Leslie's "The Religion of Jesus Christ, the Only True Religion," etc., 12mo, blue wrappers, Boston, 1719, rare first American edition famous for the litigation it caused concerning the liberty of the press in America, $76; Frank Leslie's "Pictorial Life of Abraham Lincoln," illustrated, large folio, New York, 1865, one of the rarest of Lincelen items, $100. Can you think of any way in which you could please your customers more than by giving them a book that would make them laugh? Where is the man, woman, or child who does not like a funny story?

It's been a long time since one has been published, but unquestionably answers to that description. The recommendation of this book to your clientele will not only result in pleased customers, it will serve to increase book reading generally. It will make people eager for more.

"Anyone who objects to laughing should not read 'Through the Shadows'" says the New York Globe - but who objects to laughing? THROUGH THE SHADOWS, one of the funniest novels of modern times, by Cyril Alington. $1.75. Are you in a position to take advantage of the remarkable publicity and heavy advertising which this book is receiving? Check up your stock. Send your orders today. THE IRON PUDDLER

JAMES J. DAVIS

Secretary of Labor

All the promise that is America is realized in this life story. All our boasts of equal opportunity are made good.

When a small boy, Jimmy Davis came to this country in an immigrant ship. All the family's worldly goods his mother bore on her back. Poor, obscure, ignorant, the boy went to work. It wasn't a hardship; it was an opportunity.

Bootblack; messenger; helper in the mills; iron puddler; a tramp in search of work; tin-plate roller; city clerk; county recorder; organizer; philanthropist; a member of the Harding Cabinet—all in forty years!

THE PUBLISHERS' TRADE LIST ANNUAL 1922

The most frequently used reference book in all book-stores and public libraries in the United States

"No bookseller, even the humblest, if he knows his business, can afford to be without the "Publishers' Trade-List Annual," often spoken of as "the big catalogue book," which contains the price lists of all the publishers in the country."—THE NEWSDEALER.

"The humblest dealer in the smallest town needs his "Trade-List" and its wide yearly circulation is one of the commendable results of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY having always sold it at a nominal price—a price we imagine that scarcely pays the cost of binding."—GEYERS' STATIONER.

"If the holy book was as often consulted by the public in proportion as the Trade-List is by the booksellers the cry that it is a "neglected book" would never be heard, for in every shop and in every public library this familiar "jumbo" in pebbled green is in constant daily use."

A NEW DEPARTURE IN THE ART OF COVER STAMPING

YEARs ago the stamping of covers in gold was a craft by itself requiring laborious hand work and ingenuity. Year by year new devices have been introduced to simplify this process. Alchemic Gold is not a simplified method of gold stamping, but an entirely new departure from the old process.

SCIENTIFIC research and experimentation has made Alchemic Gold what it is—a liquid substitute for genuine gold or imitation gold leaf that will not tarnish, rub, nor lose its lustre. On covers, with elaborate decorative designs, Alchemic Gold will give gold effects at very little additional cost over ink. Alchemic Gold is no longer an experiment; it is a definitely established fact. Ask your binder about Alchemic Gold; if he has not installed the process as yet, write us and we will send you further information.

We will exhibit at the Graphic Arts Exposition to be held in Boston on Aug. 28th to Sept. 2nd.

What Will the Children Read?

THE RESPONSIBILITY AND THE OPPORTUNITY TO DIRECT AND STIMULATE READING IS YOURS

THE OCCASION Children's Book Week (November 12-18, inclusive) is set apart as the specific period in which the co-operative effort of all interested in the distribution of books and in community service will be applied. The past few years have brought evidence to prove how valuable combined enthusiasm directed toward one goal can be in building a reading and a book-owning habit. It has been successful in large cities and small villages. Children's Book Week has produced a selling habit—so that there has developed successful methods of selling and distributing juveniles “fifty-two weeks a year.”

THE LOCATION The activity will be nation wide. But—

Who is going to look after your community? Publishers' efforts, bookseller and library association activities, editorial and advertising approach may strike some fire—but the real leaven of local activity depends on you in your community. You have a professional, personal and community interest to satisfy—and the parents, teachers and children of your locality need your assistance and direction.

WHAT CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK MEANS

This campaign organized by the American Booksellers' Association, participated in by the National Book Publishers' Association, the American Library Association, and the Boy Scouts of America, has grown from an effort simply to give wide publicity to books into a real constructive program for the “wider and wiser use of books.” This year for the first time the National Educational Association has made place for it in its convention program. Children's Book Week is the greatest single effort ever organized by all the forces of book distribution. Upon its success and increasing importance in the life of every community depends, in no small degree, the prosperity of every seller and distributor of books.

The Date

November 12-18, inclusive, 1922

The Bookstore and Library are in a Pivotal Position

The success of this countrywide campaign depends finally upon bookseller and librarian. Theirs is the most intimate point of contact with the parents and children of a community. Their local co-operation in exhibits, advertising, lectures and contact with teachers and others must be ready and assured if this movement is to grow and prove profitable. At the bookshop store, stock and window display should be prepared. At the library special exhibits and meetings should be held. Advertising efforts should be co-operative.

A Copyright Tempest

AT the recent Convention in Detroit the Chairman of the Bookbuying Committee of the American Library Association launched a bitter attack on American publishers for their attitude on copyright and price maintenance and included the Authors' League in his indictment. Dr. Raney professes to see in all the copyright discussion of the last thirty years a sinister effort on the part of publishers to obtain unjust rights and to fatten their purses at the expense of the public good. The Authors' League, he believes, has simply been used as a stalking horse by the publishers to be discarded when their purposes have been accomplished. A careful reading of Dr. Raney's address (which is printed in this issue) will show that he sees little of virtue or probity in any of the publishers' efforts from the founding of the American Publishers' Copyright League in 1887 to the organization of the new National Association of Book Publishers in 1920.

The unfairness of Dr. Raney's slurs on the Authors' League will be obvious to anyone who has followed the copyright situation. In order that there could be a revision of copyright, bringing the United States into the Berne Convention, it was necessary that the Typographical Union should agree to the abolishment of the manufacturing clause. This arrangement was brought about by Eric Schuler, Secretary of the Authors' League of America, whose counsel also made the first draft of the bill. This organization has, of course, no connection with publishers' groups. To picture this organization with its 1500 members and its ten years of effective history, as a tool of the publishers is a discourtesy to the League and an entirely inaccurate statement of conditions.

In the development of his attack, Dr. Raney gives a brief history of the organization of the American Booksellers' Association in 1900 and of the American Publishers' Association in 1901 and pictures their efforts to rehabilitate the retail trade as an organized effort to make books cost more to the American public which finally went down in ignominy after an adverse court decision. So, too, the National Child Labor legislation went down by court decision but it has not been suggested that there was anything discreditable in that effort. The fight from 1900 to 1915 to find some basis for the continuance of book distribution thru retail channels was an entirely creditable effort on the part of those that undertook it, and the public discussion which that fight brought forward did a great deal to clear the air and to make it possible for such book stores as had survived the price-cutting era, to go on under healthier conditions, supplemented by a large increase in new book outlets. If that was a sinister effort, the publishers are perfectly willing to have it charged against them.

It would seem better instead of broadening the discussion to an indictment of every publishing move and motive in the last 40 years that it should be confined to the actual issues involved in the new copyright bill. In the progress of publishing and of international commerce in books, it has become important to the author not only to control the right of reproduction of his work but to control it in divided fields. Such expansion could not have been contemplated when the author's only interest was his book. He can now sell separately his serial rights, newspaper rights, dramatic rights, movie rights, etc. He can also sell his rights in different countries; English rights, Canadian rights and American rights. This inherent right to subdivide has become important in the English, American and Canadian markets, three outlets having the same language. If the English author, for instance, wants a good hearing in this country he must have an American publisher. If this representative is to do him the most good he must be given exclusive control over the territory, just as patent rights are to-day made out for exclusive territories, or as dramatic rights or movie rights are arranged. In order to provide that an American publisher of a foreign author can be given such exclusive rights, the copyright bill proposes that, whenever such publisher shall register in Washington the name of a foreign book which he is marketing, that book shall not then be brought into the country except thru the channel of that particular publisher. The bill then provides that, in order to insure that the libraries may get a foreign edition if wanted, American publishers must undertake within ten days of receipt of order to arrange to bring over such edition, else the library is free to do it direct. While this does not give the American publisher the right to make his edition the only one in this market, it does put into the law a recognition of his rights and gives him a knowledge of the amount of importing done. As has been pointed out, this would have a secondary result of making him careful to see that his edition equals the foreign edition in desirability, else he would be handling too many orders from abroad with their consequent detail.

The obvious justice of such an arrangement has been recognized by Dr. Röthlisberger of Berne in a very explicit statement previously quoted in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, and an interesting corroborative expression of the author's attitude shows in the recent document published in England, signed by 50 leading authors in which the authors state that no author can adequately reach his public without having the benefit of some publisher's exclusive interest. Dr. Raney claims that an English author's receipts would total the same whether the libraries buy direct from England or here, but this does not agree with the English author's experience, as the royalty on 100 scattering library orders received in London does not compensate for the royalty he would receive on several times that number of sales of the same book if the author had had an American publisher taking active interest in the sale in this country. Nor would the author gain the benefit of an increased public in this country which might ultimately bring him wider sales of later books. American authors are just as anxious to have the same adequate hearing in England, not merely a hit-or-miss sale to a few libraries or individuals but the backing of an English publisher, and the publisher can only make such an enterprise successful by having exclusive English rights.

Dr. Raney claims that his point of view is the only one that has the interest of the People in mind. It may be doubted, however, whether the importation of 50 to 100 copies of an English book to such large libraries as directly follow English publishers' announcements is as important to the People as 500 to 1000 copies of the same book sold here as the result of American publishing enterprise and promotion. It would seem from publishing experience that if a foreign author is to get a good hearing over here, he must have an American publisher and that he cannot obtain an American publisher without being able to deliver an exclusive market.

As the libraries will be able to bring in books duty free and can demand of the publisher that he bring in the foreign editions on request, their interests are certainly well safeguarded. It would seem then, that this new copyright bill, being in agreement with the opinions of the highest copyright authorities in all countries, might be passed without charge from library quarters that its provisions are a threat against the readers of the country and that all actions of American publishers are of sinister character.

Advertising Under Fire

THE continuing discussion of the best way to advertise books has received new impetus from two very stimulating contributions to the subject.

In the July Bookman, Frank Swinnerton, author and publisher, has given a very interesting account of what he believes book advertising cannot do, and in Printer's Ink of June 22nd, Earnest Elmer Calkins, an advertising expert, has set forth again the argument for advertising general reading instead of individual books.

Mr. Swinnerton, while believing that display advertising will never pay its cost in individual sales, feels that advertising is important for the part it plays in general book distribution. His warning is largely to authors who believe that the publisher has only to take space in order to increase to an indefinite amount the distribution of his particular book. Such a statement coming from so high an authority and from an author of prominence ought to receive the attention of authors who take this point of view and by so doing put continuous and sometimes unfortunate pressure on their publishers.

Mr. Calkins would probably say that Mr. Swinnerton's argument as to the ineffectiveness of advertising individual titles gives an added emphasis to the need of general advertising of books such as he suggests. Without knowing the story of the efforts of the book-trade two years ago to raise one hundred thousand dollars a year for three years for general book promotion, Mr. Calkins has proposed that the publishers raise a million dollars a year for the next few years to put this idea over. He says this could be done if a cent a copy from all books sold were used to advertise the art of reading. His article is well worth reading by everyone interested in book promotion, tho to raise a million dollars by one cent a copy, the campaign would have to include not only trade book publishers but textbook publishers, law book publishers, medicine, subscriptions, private presses and all. The general trade sales are perhaps one-third of the total.

The argument, however, would be just as interest-provoking whatever figures be accepted as a basis. Mr. Calkins, at the request of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, has carried his argument further in an article appearing in this number.

The Bothersome Calendar

THE discussion that has been started in Washington recently about a thirteen-month calendar, with the idea of simplifying the present system by having months of equal length serves at least to point to the fact that it is difficult to keep good business records with months of different lengths and with holidays coming at various times.

Recently the Federal Reserve Bank when it issued its figures as to Spring business conditions, had to point out that totals should be considered as affected by the fact that Easter had come in April this year and in March the year before. Again, next year it will be back to the March dating.

The other date on the calendar which causes the retail trade much confusion, and, in fact, a real loss in business, is Thanksgiving, which this year comes at its most unfortunate date, from the retailer's point of view. Thanksgiving, 1922, is on the 30th of November. Every retailer of experience will agree that active merchandising of Christmas goods does not begin in real earnest until the Monday after Thanksgiving. This means that there will be just eighteen days of Christmas shopping, from Monday the 4th of December to Saturday the 23rd. This is a week shorter than the calendar allows in some years.

This situation means that retailers will have to do everything possible to get the situation to people's attention so that they will start their shopping earlier.

Children's Book Week has been set for two weeks before Thanksgiving instead of one week before, in order to help emphasize this point. The original Thanksgiving proclamations, naturally, did not foresee the growth of the Christmas-giving idea, and retailers must accept the situation as it is and get the matter to public attention, in order that impossible shopping pressure may not be put on the final eighteen days.

Does England Neglect Us?

THE interview which Sinclair Lewis granted to a New York paper after his return to this country has started a wave of comment both in London and America as to the relations between the English literary market and the American writers, or the American market and the English writers. It may be that Mr. Lewis's comment on the English situation was rather overstated by the reporter, but at least he has supplied the journals with much material for controversy.

The theory that American authors can get no hearing in London cannot be substantiated by publishing records as they now appear. It is interesting in this respect to pick up a current number of the house organ of Curtis Brown, Ltd., the well-known literary agency. This house organ in talking about spring accomplishments in that office says that "English publishers have bought American books of outstanding merit more freely than ever before in our twenty-five years of experience." In further detail the bulletin goes on to say that "one hundred and two contracts for the British rights of American books have been placed this spring." This would seem to be a good showing for one literary agent, it being remembered that many American houses now have London branches or sell books during trips of their principals to London.

A long list of American books that have been so arranged for by this agency shows not only fiction, including Fitzgerald's "The Beautiful and Damned," Willkie's "Enchanted Canyon," etc., but essays such as Robert Benchley's, travel such as William Beebe's, Van Loon's "The Story of Mankind," Lansing's "The Big Four and Others," etc.

Besides this, the agency has taken the English market for the next three books of Booth Tarkington and three of Peter B. Kyne, to say nothing of the long list of promised books for the fall by other Americans.

In further comment on the situation, we notice that this office says that "The popularity in Europe of such American writers as Curwood, Burroughs and Porter is almost as great as in England or America," Curwood's books having gone into eight European languages and the Tarzan series into five, including the Arabic.

The Tauchnitz library has recently arranged for Gertrude Atherton's "Sisters-in-Law" and for the Tarzan series. These actual instances are given not as a proclamation of the state of activities at one literary agent's office, but as current testimony to the fact that literature does move back and forth across the Atlantic and that this commerce is apparently increasing.

Whether English reviewers give adequate attention to American products will probably be governed a good deal by the number of our books that are published in that market. It is interesting in this connection to pick up the current number of the London Mercury and to notice that three volumes of American biography are considered in a review signed by Maurice Hewlett, a volume of American literary criticism in an article by John Freeman, and seven volumes of American poetry, if we count Bliss Carmen among Americans, in a review by J. C. Squire.

The opposite point of view, amusingly enough, appears simultaneously in the London Times. An "English Novelist" complains bitterly of "unfair American competition," saying that British fiction is being slowly starved out. The great lending libraries, he states, show a marked preponderance of American books. He complains mostly of Western stories like Zane Grey's, writers like the two Mrs. Porters, and of Tarzan, and mentions Mr. Hergesheimer and Mr. Lewis only to praise them.

More Censorship

THE indications which have been accumulating that vice societies were about to increase their activities in book suppression became a certainty when John S. Sumner of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice visited, on July 11th, the publishing offices of Thomas Seltzer, Inc., New York, with a warrant to cover the seizure of three titles, "Women in Love" by D. H. Lawrence issued by Seltzer in 1920 in limited edition; "A Young Girl's Diary" an anonymous book by a young Austrian girl with foreword by Sigmund Freud, published in 1921; "Casanova's Homecoming" by Arthur Schnitzler; these three titles to a total of 772 copies were packed up and carried away. Copies of "A Young Girl's Diary" were also taken from Brentano's shelves. The book has been selling for a year and had been commended by President G. Stanley Hall, Charles Rann Kennedy and others.

It was a western branch of the Society for the Suppression of Vice that took the initiative recently in the Rabelais case and in Boston the Watch and Ward Society has brought about the disappearance in all bookstores of Robert Keable's "Simon Called Peter."

This succession of raids will undoubtedly bring about a more thoro thrashing out of the censorship issue in the public press than has occurred in years.

A Highly Moral Tale

The man who made the cobwebs cob
In the works of the old distillery
And who made the many old soaks sob
At the pale ale on the pillory.

Was the guy who ran the tough saloon
So we were all disgusted,
And now he finds he killed the goose
And all the eggs are busted.

Another guy who seems to be
On his way to the rocks
Is the one who keeps on marketing
His Balzacs and De Kocks.

His Cabells and his Dreisers, Boccaccios and Symonds'
Which, tho they're hardly decent,
Are as salable as di'monds.

But if he doesn't clean his house,
There is'n't any doubt
That the Comstocks'll get him
If he don't cut it out.

Stop the sale of shady stuff
Or you all will get discredited
And we'll never have a chance to buy
A classic that's not "edited."
"ANON."

James Joyce Taboo

JAMES JOYCE has recently completed his "Ulysses" in a volume of nine hundred closely printed pages. These nine hundred pages it is said, cover the events of twenty-four hours. The post-office censors will not allow the book to be brought into this country. It will be remembered, when a chapter from the book was published by the Little Review, in its July-August number in 1920, the censor brought the publishers of the magazine into court on the charge of publishing an indecent book.

"Where did you get the plot for your second novel?"

"From the film version of my first."

Copyright and the Publishers

By M. Llewellyn Raney

Chairman of the Book Buying Committee of the A. L. A.

WE are here to consider a copyright measure introduced (by request) in Congress April 28 by Mr. Tincher, of Kansas (H. R. 11476). Its titular author is not committed to it and has yet to make the necessary studies for the determination of his own attitude.

The bill's putative origin is the so-called Authors' League of America. "So-called" I say, for such copyright organizations in America have always been but parade bunting hung on publishing fronts, to be discarded after parading was over. The reason for such carnivals when the legislator comes to town is a little lone paragraph in the Constitution of the United States which says not a word about the manufacturers and sellers of books, but speaks only of authors and their public. Thus runs a part of ARTICLE I, SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power: To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

The old time publisher has a poor opinion of that sub-section and a worse one still of its English mother, the Statute of Anne. He would amend it if he could, but there is not the slightest chance. Copyright legislation remains the concern of authors and their public. As a class, however, authors are a timorous folk and slow to unite, while the public, in Mr. Roosevelt's lament, will not take its own part. Rarely, therefore, has either of these principals functioned constructively in drafting the measures definitive of their relations. In the one great historic instance of their conjunction, above noted, the publishers lost perpetual monopoly, and author's copyright was won. That eclipse of 1710 will never be forgot. But while the sceptre had passed from Stationers' Hall, the rôle of Warwick remained ever a possibility. And so, what with the diffidence of authors and the confusion of the people, publishers, busy and indeed indispensable scribes that they are, together, in the United States, with the printers, have played conspicuous parts suggesting claims and formulating terms.

The present bill is no exception. The typographers announce their willingness to forego a (unproductive) privilege—for increased tariff protection. Two publishers draw up the stipulations, and the document is taken to Washington by the Secretary of the Author's League. The measure has great capabilities for good, but the zealous scribes could not forego the temptation of slipping in a clause to the fattening of their own pockets at tremendous cost to the public and no advantage to authorship—"not emphasized by authors," as they once expressed it. Will the people's representatives sign? If the past is any criterion, they will not, for the publishers have essayed such a rider four other times in the past thirty years, and suffered four defeats—two on the floor of Congress, two in committee.

What is the proposition, so sponsored?

The bill itself has the worthy purpose of qualifying the United States for membership in the International Copyright Union, from which, save Russia, we are the only conspicuous absentee among powers of the first rank. We do hold place in the Pan-American Convention, founded on the same general principles, but our literary relations are much more intimate with Europe, especially Great Britain because of common language, than with South and Central America. We should without question enter the larger fellowship also, as Brazil has set out to do.

The fundamental principle of this association (called Berne Union from its place of birth in 1886) is that copyright once secured in any Union country has validity, without further formality or cost, thruout all the countries of the Union.

From this family of nations we have been barred for thirty years because of a provision in our law, known as the "manufacturing clause," which denies copyright to the foreigner unless his book is made here. This was the price paid the printers in the Act of 1891 for any protection at all to foreigners other than resident here. Previous to that, literary piracy was legalized and constituted the national sin, for the remission of which a host of men and women of high repute in and out of Congress struggled for a half century before attaining any degree of success.

It is but fair to say, however, that in this particular the United States was but following European precedent. Our first federal act, which established the nation's policy for a century, was passed in 1790. This was three years before France set the precedent of granting, irrespective of residence or nationality, copyright to anyone publishing a book on her soil, tho in 1852 she took a longer lead by decreeing against republication (tho not against performance) of works first published abroad, without regard to reciprocity. As for Great Britain, her law was not superior to ours when the famous petition of fifty-six British authors was presented to the Senate by Henry Clay in 1837. It took a court construction of 1868 to establish the applicability to non-residents of the Act of 1842, which allowed a book first published in the United Kingdom (England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland) to bear copyright thruout the British dominions, while it was not till 1886 that such protection was given a book first published elsewhere in those dominions. And even since 1887, when the Berne Convention went into effect, it must be remembered that an American author, to attain copyright in the Union countries, must publish there first or simultaneously, just as much as a British author must since 1891 do in the United States to get legal protection here. Publication twice in each case is necessary.

Finally, in the interest of fairness and sound action, let it be clearly recognized that American publishers cannot nowadays be charged with the habit of pirating foreign authors' works as was true before the Act of 1891. There is no National Sin crying out now for expiation. A very striking proof of this lies in the fact that, tho English authors can since 1891 get under our law by publication here, less than one per cent, according to a published statement of the Register of Copyrights, have felt the necessity of doing so.

So that, while the nuisance of double publication should be abated, public law substituted for private agreements, and the temptation to Canadian retaliation removed, yet the international situation is not such as to justify the purchase of such advantages at any price. There is abundant time for deliberation, and the opportunity for action alike uncompromising and distinguished. In such unhurried and critical temper, we may now pass from the bill itself to an examination of Sindbad,

The Publishers' Rider

The proposal is that with the repeal of the manufacturing clause shall go another, viz. revocation of everybody's right to acquire a foreign book from any source except the publisher of its American edition. No matter how shoddily the reprinter might do his work (and there would be no object in a reprint, except a cheaper one), he would thereby gain monopoly of all originals shipped here, and could charge at his pleasure. But this is to state the case in its most innocuous form. Printing here would not, under the new conditions created by this Act, be requisite to the establishment of an American edition. The foreign original might be made to serve the purpose. Three words—Copyright, John Smith, 1922—behind the title page of two such copies, when registered and deposited in Washington, would constitute an American edition. The Register of Copyright would not ask whether there were any more like these. All dealings must be with the new owner, under the dire penalties of infringement. The inscription of the magic words would be a matter of arrangement between the jobber here and the publisher there, or between the east and west side of the same house.

The first beneficiary of this scheme would be the international publisher. Thru our membership in the Berne Union, all his European issues would automatically have the protection of our laws against piracy, while only compliance with the simple formalities above mentioned, with payment of a dollar per title, would be necessary to qualification as publisher of an American edition. We could not then order such London books from London agents, but must deal instead with the New York house and pay its prices or do without. What those prices would be is not a matter of conjecture. For example, one half the titles handled here by the Macmillan Company are importations; that is, books not printed or reprinted in the United States. The average rate at which they are priced on this side is 38.3 cents a shilling, (which has an actual value at present of 22.5 cents). Now, as always heretofore, a buyer, whether individual or institution, can escape such charges by importing from England. The rider to subsection (a) of Section 6 would block that escape, and exact the higher toll.

The second beneficiary would be the importer of books from countries with broken down currency, especially Germany, and to a less extent Italy and France. What a harvest awaits the copyright manipulator in this field. The German mark has fallen to about one-sixtieth of its antebellum value, but the domestic price of books has increased but five fold. Under the rules of the trade, enforced by the Government, this price is trebled in sales to most foreign countries, including the United States. Even so, that has made German books cost us about one-fourth as much as in 1914. For the profiteer, who is already finding a way to operate, here is a golden opportunity, thru employment of the American edition fiction, to double or treble the price of sure sellers—which will mean the first rate manuals of science and philology exploited at the expense of American investigators and students.

From the operations of this pair, the bill provides six exemptions—the Government, the blind, the traveler, imported libraries, whether bought en bloc or brought in by the immigrant, foreign newspapers or magazines, and the imported originals of English translations copyrighted here. In this line of eight beneficiaries, one misses two faces—the author, who gets not an added penny, and the general public for whom his work is done. These two would like to meet. The constitution would have them do so freely. This bill says they may, provided the buyer is a Government official, or bereft of eyesight, or content with a periodical,—or has the money to take a trip to Europe or buy a whole library at once. But the searcher after truth in study and laboratory, the cultivated reader at home, the impecunious student who has not the price of an ocean voyage—they will pay heavily for the meeting, if the rider reaches his goal. The profiteer in food-stuffs for the body is held in execration. What more can be said of him who would corner the supplies of the brain?

And so, if the rider pulls rein at the White House, it will come to pass that librarians and bookbuyers of every degree will go very charily about their foreign acquisitions, for the penalty of a misstep is ugly. Never knowing what the registry of copyrights in Washington might show, they will in every instance first inquire whether some monopolist has beat them there. Is it thus we shall "promote the progress of science and useful arts?"

History of the Project

This offering of the publishers is not a new one, tho the law of other countries knows it not. By it they attempt to retrieve one of their two historic defeats of the past thirty years—the first, suffered in the Act of 1891 when victory by ambush seemed certain till a month before the Session's end Senators Sherman and Carlisle discovered the stratagem and plucked the invaders; the second, suffered in three successive adverse verdicts in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1908 and 1913. As both these contests were waged in adherence to false theories of copyright, it is well to review them.

Copyright is the exclusive privilege of multiplying and disposing of literary and artistic works. It is not a natural right, but one fixed by statute, as all rights in human society are. A natural right would be an absolute right, but absolutism is dead; one has not an absolute right to life itself. A criminal may be sentenced to death and a patriot yield his life at his country's command in its defence.

This grant is of distinctly modern origin and its entire development can be traced. The idea was unknown before the invention of printing, tho there was a lively manuscript trade during the Middle Ages and copyists abundant—no less than 10,000 in Paris and Orleans alone, it is said. By the end of the sixteenth century it was coming to be seen that if authorship, with its attendant advantages to the public, was to flourish otherwise than at the precarious pleasure of wealthy patrons, the author should for a limited term have the monopoly of production and sale. It was a national affair, however, the foreigner was not recognized, and the native author was protected against importation of the foreign reprint. Such was the typical situation in the United States when in 1891 Congress concluded at last to grant the foreigner copyright if he had his book made here. The publishers lay low, thinking to draw the old non-importation clause to prevent the customary sale of the original which they would then undertake to reprint under American copyright. While there is good reason to suppose that the attempt in court to prevent importation for use as against sale would have failed, yet the threat of such litigation might have proved a deterrent to libraries especially. So after mature deliberation, involving a distinguished Senatorial debate, Congress passed the Act with a specific proviso insuring to institutions and individuals the continued right of importation for use tho restricted to two copies.

This decision greatly upset the publishers and they have made repeated efforts at its repeal, the present being the fourth in thirteen years. It is not generally known that they tried it twice during the war—Jan. 8, 1915 (H. R. 60695), and Jan. 27, 1916 (H. R. 10231)—when public attention was focused elsewhere, but these bills did not emerge from committee, since the American Bar Association's Committee on Patent, Trade Mark and Copyright, under the Chairmanship of W. H. Parkinson, of Chicago, was awake and made efficient protest.

Their most ambitious drive, however, came in connection with the Act of 1909. This campaign really ran over nearly a decade. Learned counsel was employed, and elaborate preparations carried thru. On May 1, 1901, the American Publishers' Association and the American Booksellers' Association, recently formed for the purpose, put into effect a joint pact placing most classes of books on a net basis, except for a discount of ten per cent to libraries.

Article III of the Publishers' program ran as follows:

That the members of the Association agree that such net copyrighted books and all other of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices or whose name has been given to them by the Association as one who cuts such prices, etc.

The booksellers, on their part, voted "not to buy, not to keep in stock, nor to offer for sale, after due notification, the books of any publisher who declines to support the net price system"; to expel any member reported by any three of his fellows as having had commerce with a denounced publisher; to refuse such expelled member or a denounced dealer all discount.

Here was an agreement to destroy the business of anyone who refused an oath to support whatever retail price a publisher might set and join in punishing those who did not. Here was plain combination in restraint of trade. One need not necessarily condemn maintenance of price in order to condemn the coercive methods here employed. The defence lay in the nature of copyright as a monopoly, which was alleged to place the proprietor beyond the reach of anti-trust laws, and as sole vendor to control resale.

The results followed swiftly. First, libraries found their prices advanced about twenty per cent. The American Library Association joined by the National Education Association, protested. Second, R. H. Macy & Company, black-listed and blockaded for retailing at $1.24 a net copyrighted $1.40 novel, purchased by them at forty per cent discount, brought suit Dec. 3, 1902, against both Associations and others. On Feb. 23, 1904, the New York Court of Appeals declared the combination illegal so far as it sought to control uncopyrighted books. In March the agreement was changed to cover copyrighted books only, and two publishers instituted suits against Macy's shortly afterward. The Bobbs-Merrill Company printed, under the copyright notice of "The Castaway," the following in each copy: "The price of this book at retail is one dollar net. No dealer is licensed to sell it at a less price, and a sale at a less price will be treated as an infringement of the copyright." Macy's price was $89.

Scribner's sought to attain the same end by printing in their catalogs and bills the following notice: "Copyrighted net books published after May 1, 1901, and copyrighted fiction published after Feb. 1, 1902, all sold on condition that prices be maintained as provided by the regulations of the American Publishers' Association. In both these instances, the attempt was being made by reason of copyright monopoly to impose by notice a retail price on a dealer with whom there was no privity of contract.

The United States Circuit Court, Southern District of New York, found for Macy's July 11, 1905, and these verdicts were affirmed June 16, 1906 in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

This sequence of events is of the greatest significance to the case which we have in hand today, for it was in June and November, 1905, and March, 1906, that the three conferences to lay the basis for a bill "to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," as requested by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, were held. The publishers swarmed over the place, for here was the chance of a lifetime to win in Congress a battle they were losing in the courts. Despite the substantial labors of the Copyright Office, an amazing strand of privileges, filched from author and public for the aggrandizement of the publisher, was woven into the fabric of the draft. Here they inserted absolute prohibition of importation unless with the re-printer's consent. Continued control after sale was covered by this astounding clause:

That the copyright secured by this Act shall include the sole and exclusive right: (b) to sell, distribute, exhibit, or let for hire, or offer or keep for sale, distribution, exhibition, or hire, any copy of such work.

A purchaser could not even show a book he had bought, let alone sell it at will, unless the publishers gave written consent, and a violation would incur the fine or imprisonment fixed for infringement.

And there was much else of the same ilk.

So deftly, however, was the work done by counsel and so assured the client's manner that the Congressional Committees were at first taken in and spoke for a brief space the approved patois of the publisher. The trend of events thereafter cannot more certainly be gauged than by reading side by side the two reports of Chairman Currier dated respectively Jan. 30, 1907 and Feb. 22, 1909. The primary rights of the public were the keynote of the latter. His eyes and those of the Senate Committee, which also adopted it, had been opened by the pleas of the American Library Association and the Library Copyright League, organized for the purpose by W. P. Cutter but especially thru the appearance of a brilliant protagonist of the cultivated reader, at the hearings of March, 1908, in the person of William Allen Jenner, a New York lawyer, speaking in his own name. Mr. Jenner had already got the ear of Congress by the private publication in 1907 of a masterly analysis of the bill entitled "The Publisher against the People, a Plea for the Defense," to be followed after the hearings by "The Octopus," similarly issued. Under his penetrating probe, the proceedings broke up and turned into a general rat-hunt by all aboard. At the end the importation right was back where it ought to be, the disposal section resumed its traditional tenor in the grant, "To print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work," and many other nests were cleared out.

One last stand was yet to be made. The Supreme Court on June 1, 1908, had affirmed the lower court decisions in the Bobbs-Merrill and Scribner cases, even tho in January, 1907, the publishers had changed their "agreement" to a "recommendation," without, however, altering coercive practices. Thus the publisher could not by mere notice limit the price of resale, nor after the first vending exercise any further right. The final drive, made at the critical hearing of Jan. 20, 1909, was in the effort to insert the following clause:

"That subject to the limitations and conditions of this act copyright secured hereunder shall be entitled to all the rights and remedies which would be accorded to any other species of property at common law."

Here again appeared Mr. Jenner for the public, joined by Mr. Parkinson, who, as already seen, was still keeping his vigil in 1916.

This clause was to revive an old claim of the Stationers' Company of London, which, under the ageis of the Star Chamber, carried so high a hand for a century and a half from its charter in 1556.

Since 1710 when the Statute of Anne, the first copyright act, went into effect, all copyright in published works has been statutory. So finally decided the House of Lords in 1774. In this spirit the American Constitution was written and the Act of 1790 so construed by the Supreme Court in 1834 and repeatedly since. The effect of the clause would probably have been to upset the Bobbs-Merrill verdict. It failed, and the bill only when so amended was signed by President Roosevelt on the last day of his second term in 1909.

The end of the American Publishers' Association came in 1914 with the payment of $140,000 in damages following the third unanimous verdict of the Supreme Court Dec. 1, 1913, in favor of Macy's.

And now after all this history, with the fate of its sire full before its eyes, the young National Association of Book Publishers, our nativity greetings hardly dead on the air, dashes up on the old steed, with the prettiest trappings the best copyright saddler in America could give him, determined once more to stay the free flow of the world's thought our way, thus begging American art, science and scholarship to fill a private till.

An International Censorship?

THE New York Nation reminds us of the quaint and anomalous position to which international censorship of books and other products of art has been reduced, says the Manchester Guardian, and goes on to say, "Most artists demand unqualified freedom for their imaginations. If we do not like what they write, we need not read it; we have no business to keep them from publishing. As a theory this sounds plausible. But, to be honest, most of us have to admit that we do believe in drawing a line somewhere. It is not the artists so much as some of the dealers that matter, and some of the manufacturers of sham art. Gautier, when he hurled his philippic against the tyranny of the 'jeune fille,' and Mr. Shaw, when he commented on the banning of 'Blanco Posnet,' are, of course, most convincing. And yet we all know there are some sorts of printed muck which have nothing to do with art, and which are merely produced, like indecent photographs, to sell to moral crétins. But, by way of a line, none of us can be satisfied with the serpentine curve at present traced right, we should have to believe that what is poison for the Englishman is meat for the American, that the converse of this law is true too, and that matters may rightly be still further complicated by the inclusion of France, Germany and Hungary. An American novel, banned in its own country, has just run out of print in England. An English novel, dramatically suppressed at home, has been living prosperously ever after in America. A French novel, displayed on all the large French bookstalls for the last half-century, may not be offered for sale by an American. An American novel has just been stopped midway in its serial career by the French authorities. An Irish novel, suppressed in America and published in Paris, is daily percolating into this country by a route too devious for us to say anything about it, except that it is not illegal, altho actual publication here would be illegal. From Hungary the news comes that Walt Whitman has been suppressed as an 'anarchist and communist writer,' while Casanova, on a full edition of whose memoirs scholars from several European countries have been at work, is to be expurgated in France and in Germany. Is not the moral plain? If some international censorship be not established, the whole thing may die of ridicule. And yet different nations do have very different notions of what constitutes an offence against public decency."

Caravaning On Parnassus

IN these piping days of peace Americans may be divided into three classifications.

Those who want to write a play or a novel, those who want to go into the moving pictures, and those who want to open a bookshop. From personal observation, I am inclined to think the last class contains the majority. "It is such a nice, clean business," they gush. Everyone but a bookseller just thrills at the thought. Starting a book wagon, however, thrills even a jaded bookseller, for a traveling book shop seems to be the ne plus ultra of book-selling. The romance, however, outshines the reality.

Starting a peripatetic book shop differs from opening a bookstore only in one particular. In the shop you wait for your customer to come in, or, at best use some inducement to bring him in, while the caravaner goes after his prey. To all other intents and purposes the propositions are identical.

Cape Cod, to the writer, seemed a particularly fertile field for a book wagon. This was due to conditions peculiarly our own. At Four Christopher Street, New York, our clientele is composed mainly of writers and artists. In fact, to list the more prominent of our customers would sound like a selection from the United States Catalogue.

Most of these customers vacation on Cape Cod. The summer of 1921 found the writer trailing along to see that they were not won over by other booksellers (our customers are very precious objects). At Provincetown, Truro and Hyannis, even down to Woods Hole and Buzzard's Bay, we found all those faces which had been missing from their New York haunts.

The first thought was to open a sort of a summer service station at Provincetown for these strayed patrons. This was later abandoned for the reason that other points were too distant and it was doubtful if any one point could support even the smallest shop. A book wagon touching all points was the solution.

There were other forces at work. Mrs. Shay fell in love with an old New England farm house (they are all of the same pattern, differing only in dimensions) and we were induced to buy. With the house to pay for there was also the problem of earning a living while vacationing. Again came the summer book shop and the same solution.

The book wagon decided upon, the next problem was the car and the method of displaying stock. We bought what was considered the cheapest car, a Ford, with a suburban top. The seats were removed, shelves built facing out, and doors opening from the center—the top door acting as an awning, the lower as a shelf or counter. The “cheapest” car cost over $800 before a wheel was turned.

The driver's side was devoted entirely to fiction; the back to libraries such as the World's Classics, Everyman's, Modern, and Home Libraries. The other side contained book which can be lumped under the general classification of non-fiction, juveniles, poetry and domestic science. The stock is valued at $1500.

A man can't just pile a bunch of books on a wagon and then ride up and down the road waiting for someone to come up and demand a book.

Our entire advertising scheme is to let every soul on Cape Cod, native or transient, know that we are running a traveling bookshop.

Photos of the wagon open and en tour with cards giving home address and phone number are posted in all hotels and post offices. Roadside sign boards are used to a small extent. Potential customers, (i. e. anyone who can read) are invited to write or phone the wagon's headquarters, or, to stop the wagon on the road.

The big advantage the caravanner has over the shopkeeper is that when he locates a worthwhile customer he can visit him whenever he (the caravanner) thinks the customer needs a book.

PARNASSUS HALTS AT A PLEASANT SPOT AND FINDS MANY CUSTOMERS

Due to a lack of newspapers on Cape Cod, we were compelled to use direct advertising. This comprised:

- (a) Postcards announcing the book wagon's existence.
- (b) "Summer Reading" sent to all hotels, clubs, tea-rooms, libraries, and to persons considered good risks.
- (c) Blotters in half dozen lots to all hotels, clubs, etc.
- (d) Postcards reminding people of the book wagon's existence.
- (e) To those who have bought books we mail copies of Books of the Month, Latest Books, the Literary page of the Chicago Daily News (which Harry Hanson is good enough to send us weekly). Also copies of The Town Crier (to which the writer contributes a weekly page on books and writers) and publishers' advertising.

This obviates writing letters that are not always effective.

The total investment was a trifle less than $2500. The wagon can go into business, or out of business, in one minute and twenty-seven seconds. At night it takes longer as there are lights to be adjusted and parking laws to be observed.

In addition to stock, a swinging cot is carried lashed to the ceiling of the car. At night this is lowered by chains to the level of the driver's seat. Utensils for preparing breakfast of coffee, bacon and eggs are also carried.

The present book wagon differs from the original caravan bookshop in that it returns to the scenes of its triumphs daily. The sixty mile road representing our route is gone over at least three times a week, other points are touched daily and some only weekly. Stops and visits are governed entirely by sales and weather.

To Bertha Mahony and Mary Frank are due credit as pioneers. They showed the way and it was on their success with the original caravan that the present book wagon was devised.

Our chief object, by the way, is to keep our New York patrons who summer on Cape Cod out of the hands of Boston booksellers and to wear some of the customers of Boston book-stores to our very, very superior establishment in New York City.

Personally we think we are framed for success—only the balance sheet of October first can tell.

Tariff Jabberwocky

'Twas Fordney, and the Tariff joke
Did Payne and Aldrich in percents;
All free-list were cocoons and coke
And farming implements.

"Beware the Foreigngoods, my son!
The Belgian Hare, French Rolls, Swiss Cheese!

Beware the Turkish towel, shun
The alien Pekinese!"

He took his home-made sword in hand;
Long time the free-trade foe he sought—
So rested he by a home-grown tree,
And stood awhile in thought.

As in embargo thought he stood,
The Foreigngoods, with eyes of flame,
Came ad valorem, thru the wood,
Importing as he came!

One, two! One, two! And thru and thru
The Bethlehem steel went snicker-snack!
He left it dead, and with its head
He went, amended, back.

"And hast thou slain the Foreigngoods?
Come to my arms, my buncombe boy!
O Schedule K! Election Day!"
He chortled in his joy.

'Twas Fordney, and the Tariff joke
Did Payne and Aldrich in percents;
All free-list were cocoons and cake
And farming implements.

He Who Gets Slapped

By Earnest Elmo Calkins

I THOROLY enjoyed Mr. Denhard's article¹ about the alleged backwardness of publishers, particularly when he slaps the bump-tious advertising expert whose plan for revolutionizing the book business so distractingly bores the publisher, because I am undoubtedly one of those experts who rush in where angels fear to tread. Whether I know anything about the book business or not, I do know something about advertising. I know that the advertising man is making successes of businesses about which he knew nothing except what he learned in his earnest desire to make the advertising of that business a success. The fact that the publishing business is different means nothing. Of course it is. All businesses are different. That is the first thing a shoe manufacturer says to the advertising agent. The shoe business is different. Any advertising man good enough and big enough for the Publishers' Association to give attention to would apply to book publishing the methods he applied to automobiles, or foods, or writing paper, or dried prunes. He would study the business. And if he does study it, he will learn it.

So that's that.

Now as to whether I have any credentials at this stage of the game to justify making a basic suggestion to the publishers of the country:² Here's my "Who's who."

I am fond of books. "Fond" is a mild term for the thirst for reading that has afflicted me all my life. Books are my greatest single interest. I began to read books when I was four years old, and I have been reading books ever since. I am the 100 per cent customer the book publishers seek. When A. Edward Newton suggested his slogan, "Buy a book a week," I felt like the fellow in the old worn-out flivver who saw the sign "Speed 15 miles." He couldn't live up to it. I cannot cut my buying down to a book a week. I wish I could.

I learned the trade of a printer when I was fourteen years old. I have earned my living at it. Attached to the country printshop was a bindery. In dull times I worked at book-binding. I have set type on books for Harper's and Scribner's. In my native town was one of the best bookstores in the West, a town of eighteen thousand was considered by book salesmen the best stop between Chicago and San Francisco. That bookstore was my club.

For a year I was the buyer for the book department in a department store, because I was advertising manager, because books being printed merchandise were classed with wrapping paper, stationery and advertising. (Like the famous customs inspector's "Frogs is toads and toads is insects which comes in free, but cats is poultry and pays duty.") As advertising agent I have handled four book accounts, the Baker & Taylor Company, Frederick A. Stokes Co., McClure, Phillips & Company, and the Century Company. In a modest way I am a book collector. I read thousands of catalogs. I have written and published three books, two thru Appleton's and one thru Scribner's. So while I have lots to learn and am ready and anxious to learn it, I do have a predilection or tendency toward book advertising and selling.

Books as merchandise have this startling difference from most other products, each book is practically a new product, and even the most successful book does not justify enough advertising to sell it adequately. There is no need to enlarge on this point. All publishers know its truth. All have recently seen Frank Swinnerton's able article in the Bookman. Altho writing of an English market, Mr. Swinnerton's conclusions apply here. In addition to this fact, the retail bookselling trade is in a worse state than the tobacconists before the United Cigar Stores tackled the problem. Retailers have always been a problem to manufacturers. Retailing has not kept pace with the development of advertising and merchandising. You sometimes feel that if the average retailer in any line knew enough to run his store to the highest degree of efficiency, he would not be content to remain a retailer. He would go into something bigger.

This then is the problem: a product that cannot be advertised in the ordinary sense, and a retail trade that is slowly drying up for lack of encouragement. The bookseller is what he is because there is so little demand for books. There are just enough successful bookstores to prove that even under present conditions a dealer who loves books and knows how to sell them can still get away with it. But a trade that offers so little promise of big financial returns will not attract many of the sort who can sell books by means of personality and initiative.

Books cannot be advertised other than as they are now being advertised. Each publisher puts out his list, and we regular book buyers look them over and make note of what we want. It is a limited field, but it is all there is. Now and then a book breaks thru

Book lists, publishers' advertisements, literary periodicals all go to those who are already book readers. Outside is the far greater crowd which never looks at them because it has already made up its mind that it does not belong to the reading class. When the New York Times Literary Supplement was all books, the steps of the elevated and subway were littered with fresh, unopened copies. It was amusing the energy and promptness with which the unbookers got rid of that useless sheet.

It is necessary to recognize the existence of this very large constituency which almost never buys or reads a book. They are by no means illiterate. Some of them are college graduates. Many of them read newspapers by the hour. All of them have time, even the busiest, in between joy rides, the movies, golf, visiting, all the other means of killing time—which are as much matters of habit, as of preference, to read at least one book a week. But they haven't got the habit. And the first step that publishers should take is to give them the habit.

About half of their present habits have been given them by paid advertising, and most of the others by free publicity in the newspapers. Cigarettes, baseball, movies, radio, flivvers, safety razors, vacuum cleaners, canned music, athletic underwear, liquid shortening, were all either initiated or certainly augmented by advertising, paid advertising, free advertising in the news, and by word of mouth. The habit of reading books can be made epidemic in the same way.

Of course, it must be a joint affair. No one publisher could afford to do it, and if he could, he ought to be too selfish, for when it is done and done right it will be the biggest benefit to the publishing business since Gutenberg invented movable types and the public schools taught people to read. More than that, and this is the finest thing about the idea, it will be of the nature of a great public service, one that will be endorsed by the judicious everywhere—parents, teachers, editors, writers, preachers, all who have the best interests of mankind at heart.

Books cannot be advertised, but reading can be. Reading is the greatest common denominator. I said a while back that books differed from almost all other merchandise. But there are one or two exceptions. The phonograph record is one. The phonograph has been sold by selling music. The analogy is quite a close one. And if the publishers between them would agree to spend each year for a term of years as much as just one of those music machine companies spends, they would work a great change in the public attitude toward books.

Of course no plan should be undertaken that did not consider the retailer. His interests and the publisher's are identical. The publisher wants distribution. The bookseller wants customers. The first thing is to send more people to his store. That enables him to display more books. And the more books are shown where people can get at them and look them over, the greater the sales. Of course, if we can make the bookseller a better book salesman, so much the better. A salesman is a man who knows how to sell, but a book salesman is a salesman who loves books. Every successful salesman must know his products, but the book salesman has a bigger job. To his knowledge of salesmanship he must add a love of books, because his knowledge of his product must be constantly renewed by reading them.

Many publishers today are making excellent plans which only need wider distribution, and especially the power of a big general campaign behind them to carry far. Nor should the work of the Publishers' Association with its committee on Year-Round Bookselling fail of mention. Right there is a constructive plan which needs only the power of a strong national campaign behind it, and the interest of everyone concerned with books, a new morale, in fact, to reach far and change much. Let this work go on and let its scope increase. Let publishers continue their own present methods. But add to these a constant force that will work upon and worry, and stimulate, and interest the great mass of the public which has already made up its mind about books and made it up the wrong way. Books are different from other merchandise, and book advertising must take account of the difference; but human nature is just the same, whether you are teaching it to change from mug to shaving stick, barber shop to safety razor, hard fat to liquid shortening, or broom to vacuum cleaner.

Co-operation in creating a market that did not exist before is no new thing in advertising. Prunes, bread, milk, raisins, cheese, sweet potatoes, coffee, apples, oranges, cranberries, paint and varnish, cypress, hardwood, pine, brick, cement and tile are only a few of the products whose use has been increased by association advertising. The California fruit growers spent \$800,000 in 1921, and had the largest year's business in their history. The appropriation proved to be only $\frac{3}{4}$ of 1 per cent of the market value of the product thus sold. The output of raisins has been boosted from 70,000 to 200,000 tons. This year the raisin growers are spending \$1,400,000. The point is that the advertising is creating a market, not merely supplying one. It is making habits. Similar stories could be told of other associated products. Wherever the appropriation is large enough, and the organization holds together, and the conduct of the advertising is left to one authority, with power to act, and the plan is sound, success has followed.

The essentials are:

1. Cooperation of all interested in the selling of books.

2. An appropriation large enough to make a dent in the habits of the public.
3. Continuity—for a term of years, certainly; preferably forever.
4. A constructive plan securing more retail outlets, and improving those that now exist.
5. To sell the idea—not the product; the reading habit, rather than books.

Authors and Advertising

NO recent article discussing book advertising has aroused more interest than the contribution of Frank Swinnerton in the July issues of the Bookman, entitled "Authors and Advertising." Mr. Swinnerton, as is well known, can speak out of many years' connection with the famous London publishing office of Chatto & Windus. He can speak also as a novelist whose position is recognized in both book markets, and he has been a continual contributor of enlightening book-trade comment to the Bookman.

Mr. Swinnerton's thesis is that advertising does not sell books. He says that in the long years spent in the publishing world he has never found an author who was satisfied with the advertising his book was receiving. He believes this critical attitude is brought about because authors do not understand the business of advertising. They particularly do not understand that the publisher lives by his list and not by the individual books in it.

"To the author," says Mr. Swinnerton, "his own book is all important. He is aware of other books; but only as the egoist is aware of other people. His eye instinctively singles out the title of the book upon which he has expended his time, his heart beats for its success, its popular appreciation. How can the publisher, he thinks, expect this book to be a best seller if he does not take all the necessary steps to make it a best seller?"

To such questioning authors, Mr. Swinnerton makes the flat pronouncement "that advertising does not sell books. I should like," he says, "to go on repeating this until somebody in the writing profession believes it. Advertising by itself does not sell books; no amount of advertising sells any book to an extent which justifies the great expense of the campaign."

"The publisher," to brief Mr. Swinnerton's argument, "must think of his whole list. Upon some of these books he will no doubt make a profit, on others, suffer a loss; but for his own sake he must do as much for all of them as he can. He makes his plans accordingly. As a young publisher he learned his business and the truth about advertising. If he has not learned the truth, he will not survive. There is a public for every book that is written, whether it be a small public, a large public or a medium public. What one man chooses to write, others may choose to read. The reason a book sells is that people want to read it, and sometimes a good book may be interesting.

"The whole question is to reach the particular public to which the book appeals. It is not to be done by advertising; it is to be done by a grasp of psychology and a knowledge of expedients. If it were otherwise, all books would be best sellers, which is what the publisher knows only a fraction of his output has any chance of being. He insidiously prepares those of us who read books for the treat that is in store. The book finds its public, whether small in numbers or many, because the publisher has grasped our psychology, the psychology of a group. That is his business. But it has not been by advertising that he has reached us, for we never notice advertisements until the things that are advertised are familiar to us. The publisher knows that when a book is a success that is the time to advertise it, but not before.

"It will be asked why it is that publishers continue to advertise. There are many reasons why books fail, but only one that matters. That is, that nobody wants to read them. They fail because there is not a sufficient number of potential readers in the world or because the time is not opportune, because for some reason the psychological moment is missed. Even publishers are not infallible in their reading of possibilities. What must be reiterated, however, is that were the publisher to double his advertising on these failures the effect upon the sales would be negligible.

"Publishers advertise for the following reasons: First of all, because authors like it and expect it and because it is a convention. Also it may be that those papers which devote space to book reviews need some other proof than continued circulation that is worth while to continue. Only when we know something about a book do we notice its presence in the advertising columns. The publisher understands this very well. If any author asks any publisher what it is that sells books he will hear from each and every publisher the same reply, 'It is talk.'

"Publishers' advertisements primarily are not advertisements of the books at all. They are advertisements of the publisher. They are the means by which he keeps his own name before the public. It is good for an author to be a feature on the list of the publisher who has a standing based upon his habitual connection with good books. Because of this advertising, when a friend mentions a book, the time it takes to connect his praise with some link of previous knowledge is shorter than it otherwise would have been. The reaction which takes us to the bookseller's shop is quicker.

"Advertising is thus a part of the make-up of the literary world. As far as the individual book is concerned, it does not result in the sale of anything like the numbers which it is supposed to do. Often it does not effect the sale of a single book. What it does is to help. One does not buy books as a result of seeing them advertised; one sees them advertised as a result of buying them. And so each year the publisher deliberately spends large sums of money in doing that which he knows will bring him no direct return.

"Advertising means nothing at all, and yet the publisher who does not advertise is forgotten. Not so with the book; the book makes its own friends and its own sales."

Do the Ads Advertise?

FRANK SWINNERTON'S article in the July Bookman is probably intended for the eyes of those captious authors who are constantly criticising their publishers for lack of boldness in using advertising space. If that is the case, his points are well made. No one who watches book distribution, whether as a retailer or publisher, believes that there can be any automatic relation established between advertising expenditure and gross sales.

What we should like to object to in his argument is the general implication that display space has no direct power of its own, but must rely on the reader's previous interest in its subject to draw any attention. It seems to us that both retailers and publishers can, from their own experience, disprove this assertion. Retailers know that buyers come into their stores guided by display advertisements. They know, also, that their own confidence in a book is built up by the cumulative effect of a series of advertisements, and advertising for retail confidence is certainly part of the effectiveness of display space. It is also to be doubted whether the average reader turns only to the text columns of the literary journals and reads display space under compunction or after previously aroused interest.

It may be rather hard for a bookman to gauge the different effects of these two kinds of type on the general reader's mind, but speaking from personal feeling about type, we believe that a page of text, unrelieved by display advertisements, is most unattractive to the eye and might perhaps be completely passed by.

Take literary pages the full newspaper size, such as the Boston Transcript. Does anyone believe that if these pages were in solid text columns without display space they would be as attention-compelling when first opened up or as likely to be read as with text and advertisements together? Take the tabloid form of paper such as the Evening Posts Literary Review. Does any student of book promotion believe that it would be as widely read if the contents were solid text, unrelieved by display type? It would certainly take a great deal of illustration and special arrangement of articles to break up the monotony and make page after page readable and enticing. Try the effect of text columns in the magazine form, such as the Atlantic. After reading a couple of pages of those very competent reviews, the eye will be found to turn with pleasure to the carefully arranged display pages, and if the reviews read had been in the general reading matter of the magazine, the reader would find himself turning back thru the advertising pages for the rest and attractiveness of display arrangements.

Mr. Swinnerton is right when he says it takes many different elements to sell a book, but he is wrong when he so largely underestimates the direct power of display space when well used. Whether it is always well used or not, is a perpetual and stimulating discussion of every succeeding book-trade year, but that good display has appealing power cannot be gainsaid.

McParland Head of Typos

JOHAN MCPARLAND of New York was re-elected President of the International Typographical Union by a majority of 4,533 over Walter W. Barrett of Chicago, his only opponent, according to the official vote tabulation. McParland received 28,752 votes to his opponent's 24,219.

Bibliographies in New Books

THOSE who use for reference the reading lists and bibliographies that are found in current books and magazine articles have sometimes found that these are made with carelessness and that there is a lack of uniformity in their make-up that prevents their being fully available for those who are particularly interested in getting information. Another difficulty is that authors sometimes put in references to books with which they have only second-hand acquaintance, and their references to such books therefore are not very accurate. The senior class of the New York State Library School has been making a special study of this subject and has issued the result of its study in a brief statement, which it is suggested that publishers might well reprint to send out to their authors.

Directions that a Publisher Might Send to an Author Concerning a Bibliography.

Bibliographies to be appended to books or to articles in scholarly magazines should be restricted to material consulted by, or familiar to the author. They should serve as quick and trustworthy guides to selected authorities. Bibliographies in a book may be appended to the chapters, or, if preferred, the items may be collected and placed together at the end of the book. In this case it is advisable to arrange entries in groups according to the nature of the subject. The arrangement of the individual items also depends upon the nature of the subject and should be adhered to, whether an alphabetical, topical or chronological method is adopted.

Include in each entry:

Author's name, last name first, followed by his initials. (Anonymous references should be entered under the first distinctive word of the title.)

Title. (Enough readily to distinguish and describe the book.)

Name of translator or editor.

Edition of the work referred to if other than the first.

Place of publication and publisher.

Date of publication and copyright date, if different.

Number of pages, or number of volumes, if more than one.

Illustrations, diagrams, maps, etc., if they add to the value of the book or article.

In the case of analytics (articles in periodicals, single chapters in books, single poems, etc.), the volume number, if more than one, should be given, and the inclusive paging of the portion referred to. The exact date of the periodical from which an analytic is taken should also be given.

A table of abbreviations compiled after the bibliography is complete should precede the list.

Slosson, E. E. Creative chemistry: descriptive of recent achievements in the chemical industries. N. Y. Century. 1920. c. 1919. 311 p.

(Analytic)

Seidell, A. Solubilities of inorganic and organic compounds. 2d. ed. N. Y. Van Nostrand. 1919. p. 776-78.

The Cry for New Books

E. L. PEARSON, of the New York Public Library, in an article in the Independent and Weekly Review answers the prevalent complaint that libraries never have any new books. He says, in part: "The problem of the new books has always been a tough one for the public librarian, but it is especially troublesome now. More and more people demand new and ever newer books from the public libraries; the price of books is higher, and nearly every public library is far poorer than it was five years ago—poorer both relatively and absolutely. That is what's the matter with the public library."

"Four-fifths of the complaints come from people who do not understand how to use a public library. They expect it to perform miracles, and they do not allow it to do the work which it could do for them. It is right and proper for the library to supply novels and short stories, or, as George Ticknor wrote to Edward Everett sixty or seventy years ago: for it to furnish the people with 'the pleasant literature of the day . . . when it is fresh and new.' But it is unreasonable to expect that it can keep up with the enormous stream of novels and the enormous demand for them (far greater than Ticknor ever imagined), just as it would be unreasonable to expect the theater to provide everyone with an aisle seat on first nights.

"If the public libraries are to be more satisfactory, the reading habits of people must change. They must go elsewhere for most of their novels and short stories, and be as willing to spend ten or fifteen cents to hire a new novel from a commercial circulating library as to spend the same amount for an ice-cream soda. Or as ready to spend fifty cents or a dollar a month in dues for a neighborhood book-club as they are to pay out three times that amount for the movies. In regard to the presumably more solid and certainly more expensive book of history, travel, biography, or whatever, which is new and so popular that it is practically unobtainable at the library—well, why not buy one outright now and then. Five dollars spent for two theater tickets may give you a pleasant evening and possibly some agreeable recollections. The same amount for a book may give you seven or eight pleasant evenings, and also some agreeable recollections.

"In short, one of the troubles with the American public library is really the fault of the American people: they themselves do not buy enough books. (And I say this calmly, disregarding whatever anger it may cause publishers and booksellers.)

"If your public library cannot lend you the older novelists (not the great giants alone, but also lesser and attractive figures like Frank Stockton and Edith Somerville); if it cannot give you something to read about a subject as profound as Oriental philosophy, or as homely as raising radishes, as esoteric as St. Catherine of Siena, or as practical as book-keeping—if it has nothing at all for you on these topics, or others like them then indeed there is a fault somewhere. And if you wish to find out where it lies, and are not content merely with making cutting remarks to the girl at the desk, or writing sarcastic letters to the librarian, you will probably discover that the municipal body, whatever it is which provides the funds, has been at its favorite pastime of economizing—beginning with the public library. A small boy once told his teacher that Queen Elizabeth was a robber; that she stole food from the army. Asked for his authority, he pointed to the sentence in the history, which said that 'Elizabeth pinched her soldiers' rations.' This form of pinching has long been popular when practiced against public libraries, and until the public begins to protest, it will probably continue."

THE MACMILLAN Co. will publish an American edition of the Times Atlas on which $500,000 has been spent in making it "the most complete and illuminating atlas of the world that has ever been published."

An Uncorrected Galley

THE EX-KAISER'S MEMOIRS

H. I. PHILLIPS in The Globe Trotter column of the New York Globe comments on the Ex-Kaiser's sale of his memoirs.

"My only regret," he declared, according to the Dorne correspondent of the Berlin Picayune & Dispatch, "is that I have but one book to give for my country!" Note the difference between Wilhelm and Blasco Ibáñez: Wilhelm started the world war, spent five years trying to personally conduct it—and landed in near-solitary confinement; Ibáñez wrote a book about it and made a fortune!

Just now they are casting about for a good title. Will favors something short and snappy like "MY LIFE, BY ME," but his advisers are holding out for "FROM BADEN-BADEN TO WORSE AND WORSE."

WHO WROTE "LOVE'S FEVER"?

Condon's "book title" craze, has now reached a flood tide that rivals the popularity of that vexed conundrum of the past, "How old is Ann?" It is no longer safe to answer an apparently innocent question about some alleged book. The normal person, on being asked whether he has read "Love's Fever," replies politely:

"No, I haven't—who wrote it?"

But that indiscretion nowadays would expose you to a roar of laughter from the company when the joker replied:

"'Love's Fever' is by Ophelia Pultz."

A topical one is "The Axe," by Will I. S. Cape, but one correspondent renders the writer's name as William I. S. Cape and wonders why he is consistently failing to raise a laugh.

Here are some other recent ones:

"Postscripts," by Adeline Moore.

"Communism," by Esau Redd.

"Necessity," by E. Connie Mee.

"Temporary Measures," by Iona Ford.

"The Proposal," by William Harry Mee.

"Upheaval," by Dinah Mite.

"Tracing Fire," by St. John Coates (English pronunciation, please).

"Winning Colors," by Justin Front.

"Red Murder," by Plunket Innes Hart.

"Unanswered," by Ida Know."

"A Bad Bargain," by Margot Dunn.

"Pussyfoot's Paradise," by Carmen Drinkwater.

"Money," by Ellis Dee.

FRANK MORRIS IN HIS BOOKSHOP IN CHICAGO

Frank Morris's Anniversary

ALTHO the fact that Frank Morris celebrated his thirty-fifth anniversary as a bookseller on June 9 is not news to readers of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, we mention the matter again as an excuse to reprint this bookish photograph of him taken in his bookshop by the Chicago Daily News. The Chicago Daily News also printed several good anecdotes about Mr. Morris and Eugene Field.

One day Eugene Field walked into Morris's first store, on the corner of State and Madison Streets, where the Boston store now stands, and asked naively: "My dear sir, have you an unexpurgated copy of the poems of Felicia Hemans?"

"One day Field came in with several copies of his books and left them on my desk," said Mr. Morris. "He remarked they were books I ought to have. I opened the top one and found it inscribed to me with the words: 'To Frank Morris, in token of appreciation for many favors yet to come.' And on another day, when he had been looking over my stock, he had written this poem and left it for me:

"This is the robber, as sure's you're born,
Against whose guile I fain would warn
The bibliomaniac, tattered and torn,
Who pauses to look at some second-hand book
That lies on the shelf all covered with dust
And is marked 'Four Dollars for Cash—No Trust!'

In a gloomy corner that smells of musk
Down in the shop that Morris built."

(From Our London Correspondent)

THERE are two trade societies in Great Britain which care for the publishers and booksellers' assistants — The National Book-Trade Provident Society and The Booksellers' Provident Institution. The latter organization was founded in 1837, and is therefore the senior of the two. Queen Alexandra is the Patron, and C. J. Longman is the President. Both societies look after the welfare of the assistants and do it very well. In the B. P. I., as it is familiarly known, a young man, or woman, under the age of 18 may, for a lump sum of $45 or a yearly subscription of about $2, participate in benefits of a varied kind. There is also a charming retreat in the country to which those no longer able to work may retire as vacancies occur. Here, in the quietude and peace of the countryside, the evening of the days may be spent; garden produce, coal and attendance are free, and in addition a small annuity is granted. The capital of the B. P. I. is already about $150,000. As the age of an assistant increases, if he or she is not a member, so the life payment or subscription increases. The lowest payment as stated above is $2. The highest is that of a person of 50—the limit—which calls for a life payment of $300 or about $20 per annum.

The National Book-Trade Provident Society is on an entirely different basis. It is much younger, in fact only about 20 years old, but in that short time it has acquired a capital of some $50,000, which grows yearly. William Meredith, head of Constables, is the President, and Mr. Blackwell, of Oxford, is Treasurer. It is a very democratic body, managed by both masters and assistants of both sexes. At present it is not rich enough to provide a country home, but it has distributed very generous amounts to its members. One of the most notable of its benefits is the recent one of providing its subscribers, free of charge, with the opportunity of the best and most up-to-date dental surgery. It will interest readers of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY to learn that this has been a most popular benefit and eagerly applied for. Membership of the N. B. T. P. S. is secured for life by payment of $25 or an annual subscription of $1.25. So you see the fees are much lower than in the B. P. I. Both associations have the benefit of the advice of the finest London medical men without charge. Last year the late Mr. Heinemann bequeathed to the N. B. T. P. S. $2500. A considerable revenue is derived from The Odd Volume, a yearly publication issued by a sub-committee of the Society. From the profits of this organization, the work of which all is voluntarily given by a few enthusiastic publishers and booksellers, something like $7000 has been paid over to the funds of the society. During the war period the publication stopped, and the activities of the committee are to be resumed this year by the publication of "something"—it is a dead secret at present, out of which it is expected many hundreds of dollars will be paid over. One honest English gentleman, having bought a copy of an issue of The Odd Volume some years ago, was so struck with the excellency of the production and the account of the work of the N. B. T. P. S. which was printed in detail, that he left the Society close upon $5000.

Careless America

ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL writes very crisply in The North American Review about the careless linguistic and literary equipment of modern America. "We can see for ourselves the results of our intellectual slovenliness everywhere," she says. "Students may crowd the lecture hall; they may fill an astounding assortment of examination papers; they may come out of school or college or university laden with laurels; but they cannot speak or write decent English. Their language is the language of the comics. In voices they have never been taught to control or modulate; they 'gotta go' and they are 'gonna do it,' and they sprinkle their talk with such gems as 'watcha' and 'gotcha' and similar vulgarisms, barren even of the humor or vigor that makes real slang amusing and sometimes eloquent. As they talk so they write, their respect for the written no deeper than for the spoken word—anything to save time and trouble—almost everywhere space-and-time-saving abbreviations, until it looks as if presently books and papers will be printed in shorthand.

Where there is no feeling for the beauty of language there can be none for the beauty of literature. We have Professors of English by the legion, and how many writers or critics of distinction, how many readers of discernment or appreciation. If the critic, the leader, fights shy of work done the day before yesterday, if he rejoices in his escape from the leading-strings of Greek and Latin, if he differentiates between the English language and the American, if he boasts of emancipation from the traditions that are the heirloom of modern literature, can we wonder at the quality of the 'best sellers' and the cheap magazines on our bookstalls—at the demoralizing amount of second-rate work, applauded in second-rate reviews, devoured by a second-rate public?"

Communication

NONE BUT BEST WANTED .

June 29, 1922.

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY,

I am much impressed by the splendid offer of Mr. Medcalf, of Scrantom's to supply volumes in the Bohn Library at 50 cents each and desire to show my appreciation by giving him thus publicly a standing order for any of the following at that rate: Ammianus Marcellinus; Apuleius; Athenaeus; Cicero's Letters; Greek Romances; Philo Judaeus; Pliny's Natural History; Strabo; Suetonius.

I must of course reserve the right to refuse more than twenty-five sets of the Pliny at that price.

Sincerely yours,

W. H. ALLEN, Bookseller.

Anatole France Banned

POPE PIUS has banned the complete works of Anatole France by placing them upon the Index Expurgatorius. This means that the members of the Roman Catholic Church throughout the world may not read the French author. It is thought that this may cause a great interest and curiosity in France's new book "The Swallow Under the Roof." There is also great curiosity as to the reason for the ban upon the works of Anatole France at this time as the anti-clerical writings were published so long ago. The New York World commenting in an editorial says:

"Not long ago Anatole France dragged the French Academy into the news by joining it; now the same author has recalled the Index Expurgatorius to fame by the expedient of getting himself listed therein with all his works. There was a time when such a degree from the Congregation of the Holy Office would have caused a burning of books from one end of Europe to the other—when M. France would have found himself obliged to write what was orthodox according to Rome or lose his audience. Today he will lose readers in many sections of Europe, but it is quite possible that he will gain enough in others to make up for the loss. Whether a book is censored by an official of the Government or by the Pope, there are always people anxious to look into it merely because it is forbidden. M. France has frankly attacked the church. The church is as frankly turning its weapons against him. But it is to be doubted that a recourse to the Index will prove half so effective as silence would have been. It seems a mistake, also, to include all the novels—'Sylvestre Bonnard' among them—in the general condemnation."

Mail Matter for Australia

THE customs tariff of Australia provides an alternate duty of 10d. per pound, or 45 per cent ad valorem (whichever returns the higher duty), on catalogs, price lists, circulars, prospectuses, show cards, and photographic, lithographic, and other printed advertising matter.

Publishers who issue expensive catalogs and price lists often suffer a serious disadvantage when such packages arrive addressed to Australian business men, who find that they are required to pay duty and short postage. In many cases, if he had previously been inclined to purchase in the United States the line represented by the catalog, its receipt in this manner offends him to such an extent that he refuses to give further consideration to any line that that particular concern has to offer. It is therefore advisable to warn American business houses to make certain that the duty is fully prepaid and that packages bear the full amount of postage required. It should also be borne in mind that short postage which has to be paid at the other end is levied at double the regular rate.

Prepayment of duty on all kinds of printed advertising matter may be made by means of stamps, which are obtainable from the official representative of the Commonwealth of Australia, room 610, 11 Broadway, New York.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

JAMES F. DRAKE, the rare book dealer, announces the publication shortly of "The Bride of Huitzil," by Hervey Allen, in a limited edition printed by Bruce Rogers.

George H. Sargent contributes to the July number of Antiques an article on "Almanacs and the Flight of Time" which will be of special interest to collectors of Americana.

Charles F. Heartman will not mix book buying with a vacation abroad. He will instead adjourn his book sales until September and take a six weeks vacation in Canada fishing.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will bring out Max Beerbohm's series of cartoons of Rossetti and his circle of friends, Ruskin, Swinburne, Morris, Millais and others, this autumn. The originals exhibited in London created quite a stir. The entire collection has been bought by Hugh Walpole.

There has just been issued in Russian the hitherto unpublished Chapter IX of Dostoevsky's novel, "The Possessed," containing Strawrogin's Confession which had remained unprinted "on moral grounds" until the Soviet Press Department discovered the original text of this suppressed portion in the course of its organized search of the Russian Imperial Press Censorship Office. Another new fragment by Dostoevsky has been issued at the same time in a sketch of an unwritten novel entitled "The Life of a Great Sinner." An English translation of these, together with some other portions of the Russian novelist's material, will shortly be published by the Hogarth Press.

The centenary of the death of the poet Shelley was observed in Rome. Nelson Gay, the British Ambassador, and Professor Stevens, director of the American Academy, went early and placed wreaths in the name of the municipality of Rome, of the Keats-Shelley Association and of the New York Committee of the latter association. Signora Lova Shelley, great-niece of the poet, who is married to an Italian naval officer, brought her little son to lay flowers on the tomb. The Society of Giordano Bruno also bought wreaths, attesting reverence for the noble mind and genius of the poet. There were many other floral offerings.

The Salles Sylvestre, the Sotheby's of Paris, founded in 1787 and continued by a long line of famous auctioneers who have sold during the last century many of the most valuable libraries of France, closed its doors a little over a year ago and for a time it looked as if the famous old auction house had come to an end. The rights to the name has been purchased by a Parisian bookseller, new quarters have been fitted up, and several important sales have been held. The new firm seems to have started with the good wishes of the French book sellers and collectors and Sylvestre's appears to have been launched upon a new period of usefulness and fame.

The Borough Council of Teddington, England, is going to mark the house where Blackmore, the author of "Lorna Doone," lived and wrote his novels, with a memorial tablet. In the early fifties Blackmore was classical master at Wellesley House School. A few years later he inherited money from his uncle and he bought a plot of land, built Gomer House and spent the remainder of his life writing novels and growing peaches, pears and strawberries. He had a great affection for the place and the fame of his stories attracted much attention to the region. It is now felt by the people of the country-side that they should show the appreciation due to the famous novelist and the home which he loved so much.

The Centaur Book Shop, 1224 Chancellor Street, Philadelphia, announces the publication of a series of bibliographies, mainly of living American authors. The first will be a "Bibliography of the Works of Joseph Hergesheimer" compiled by H. L. R. Swire, with a foreword by Mr. Hergesheimer. The edition will be limited to 300 copies, bound in boards, and ten copies on Japan paper will be signed by the author for presentation. Other bibliographies in preparation include Sherwood Anderson, Stephen Crane, James Branch Cabell, Edgar Saltus, H. L. Mencken, Willa Sibert Cather, James G. Huneker, Ambrose Bierce and Theodore Dreiser. For a year or two there has been a keen interest in the first editions of these more recent authors among collectors. These bibliographies are pretty sure to increase this interest, not only in the more modern American writers, but the whole field of American literature as well, for, once started, the collecting of all American authors of merit will be stimulated.

The first volume of "The Catalogue of the Ashley Library" collected by Thomas J. Wise, the well-known English bibliographer, has just made its appearance. It has been printed with great care, making a handsome volume 10 1/3 lby 7 3/4 inches, with a frontispiece portrait of Mr. Wise and 165 full page reproductions of title-pages and autograph letters, bound in buckram, privately printed and limited to 200 copies. Richard Curle has written an introduction and he mentions a long list of English authors whose collections in this library are the finest in existence. Among these are Nash, Ben Jonson (the plays), Shirley, Milton (poetry and tracts), Ford, Davenant, Chapman (the plays), Waller, Dryden, Pope, Prior, Gay, Gray, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley, Keats, Byron, Landor, Tennyson, the Brownings, Borrow, Morris, D. G. Rossetti and Swinburne. These authors represent Mr. Wise's preferences and it is generally conceded that within its range the Ashley Library is easily the foremost in England. This catalog will be invaluable for collectors and may do much to turn attention in the direction of eighteenth and nineteenth century English authors.

During the first week in June the University of Texas commemorated the centenary of the death of the poet Shelley by exhibiting in the Wrenn Library original autograph letters, first editions and association copies which form a part of its remarkable Shelley collection. The Texas papers have given considerable space and not a little enthusiasm to their report of the exhibition. The rarest and most interesting of the items exhibited, the one that gave chief distinction to the exhibit, was the "Original Poetry of Victor Casier," 1810, one of three known copies of Shelley's poetical publication. Of the other two copies, one is in the Huntington Library in California and the other in the private library of Thomas J. Wise in London. The Wrenn copy receives additional interest from its associations. It is the presentation copy from Shelley to his cousin, Harriet Grave, with whom he was in love at the time it was published. It was also the first copy that was recovered after all copies had been lost for more than three-quarters of a century, the one from which Richard Garnett made his reprint in 1898. Other first editions displayed were "Zastrozzi St. Irvyne"; four successive issues of "Queen Mab," the first privately printed edition, 1813, the first published edition, 1821, the first edition printed by Carlile, 1822, and the first reprint, 1829; two copies of "Prometheus Unbound," one is the copy bound by Cobden-Sanderson for the Shelley centenary, 1892, having inserted the "Centenary Ode" by Charles S. Middleton; Swinburne's copy of "Adonais," having inserted the manuscript of his "Sonnet on Shelley"; an entirely uncut copy of "The Genci," in the original Italian paper wrappers; Thomas Jefferson Hogg's copy of "A Six Weeks Tour," with the inscription "T. J. Hogg from the author"; and the first issue of "Laon and Cythna," with the cancelled title-page.

The summer exhibition of accessions to the library of The Grolier Club at 47 East 60th Street contains 75 remarkably fine mezzotints of printers, engravers, collectors, and the like. Among the books will be found the remarkable Bibliography of William Blake, which has been selling at $75.00 per volume, together with other interesting books. Admission is free. F. M. H.

"Main Street" was more than a good novel.
It represented an idea that interested all America. And is even more significant than "Main Street."

When you have finished it you will want to talk over George and Myra Babbitt and their friends in the same way that you and your wife just can't help discussing your neighbors as soon as you have slammed the front door behind them.

Babbitt

will turn America into a vast debating society.

And that SELLS BOOKS.

Fundamentally we are a serious people. And entertaining, dramatic, is a serious and fundamental novel of American life.

Babbitt

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEXTBOOKS

That Meet Present-day Tests

Story Hour Series

STORY HOUR READERS (Grades One to Three Inclusive)

This method represents the best pedagogy of today. In its emphasis on thought-getting instead of word-memorizing it gives excellent preparation for silent reading. By means of its simple and effective phonetic work the pupil makes amazing progress in learning to read.

STORY HOUR READINGS (Grades Four to Eight Inclusive)

In these new books the delightful selections represent the best of both classic and modern writers. They provide the kind of reading material especially needed by schools today because it is strong in its training of character and in its ideals of citizenship.

CARPENTER'S NEW GEOGRAPHICAL READERS Europe, South America

These supplementary readers on geography have never had a rival in their field. They are used in almost every school no matter what geography texts may be in use.

In the New Edition these readers have been brought down to date in every respect. They have been rewritten throughout and reset from cover to cover. The illustrations are entirely new and for the most part from photographs taken by the author. The research questions inserted at intervals give an additional teaching quality to the books.

BRIGHAM AND McFARLANE'S ESSENTIALS OF GEOGRAPHY A Two-Book and a Four-Book Edition

These geographies are strong in both content and method features. They place a major emphasis on industrial and commercial life; they have a simple, appealing style; their maps and pictures are remarkably beautiful; they give up-to-date information of changes wrought by the World War.

PEARSON AND SUZZALLO'S ESSENTIALS OF SPELLING In two or three books

The vocabulary in these books is based on the examination of thousands of children's compositions. The strong features are: The careful selection of words; large amount of dictation sentences to provide review of the words taught; the grading of the lessons; the definite directions for teachers.

KRAMPNER AND GRADY'S ARITHMETIC BY GRADES For Grades Three to Eight Inclusive

These arithmetics provide real work for the children to do, and include an unusual amount of drill work and speed tests. They insist that the pupils shall prove all their computations. The problems present a great variety of actual conditions relating to the ordinary activities of the home, the classroom, the playground, and the store. The illustrations are particularly attractive.

FOR TEACHERS

PITTMAN'S SUCCESSFUL TEACHING IN RURAL SCHOOLS

Letters from one rural school teacher to another—frank, friendly, and wholly unpedantic, yet full of inspiring and practical suggestions. Every teacher in rural schools who reads this book will feel that the writer was acquainted with the very problems which she herself finds most perplexing. Her interest in it will be doubled because it pictures a record of achievement that is within her reach.

In this unpedagogical way are presented the most approved educational theory and the new problems of teaching, measurement tests, and special methods. So delightful are these letters that the teacher who reads them once will be sure to reread them.

Educational Research and Textbook Making

“WHAT is the matter with our schools?” The impatient public asked the question and schoolmen have earnestly sought the answer. Courses of study were investigated, textbooks, school equipment, school administration, school buildings—all the machinery of education. One day it occurred to some one of a scientific turn of mind to examine the raw material of education—the school child.

The trial of a few simple tests, built up and administered on a scientific basis, brought astounding discoveries. Children of the same age in the same grade were found to differ widely in both ability to learn and knowledge acquired; too much was being required of the duller children, too little of the brighter ones; schools differed amazingly in their minimum requirements.

To meet the demand for more testing, new and better tests have been devised, following two lines of research, both of immense importance to education. One attempts to find out what may reasonably be expected of the individual child. The second considers what must be required of the child. What ought he to know? What does he himself want to know? How and when can he best learn?

Discovery and verification of the facts rest almost wholly on the scientific use of carefully standardized tests. World Book Company early recognized the importance of scientific, standardized tests, both as educational devices in themselves and as a means for improving textbooks and methods. By the establishment of a test service under the direction of a nationally recognized test expert, this house is able to coöperate with all endeavors in the line of testing; and to apply the results of this testing in the making of textbooks that meet the new requirements.

TEXTBOOKS WHICH STAND SUPREME

THE WINSTON READERS

Primer, First, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth

The popularity of these beautiful Readers with teachers and schoolmen can be measured by their annual sale, which in the three years since their publication has reached 700,000 copies a year.

The Interleaved Manuals for the teacher are a distinctly helpful accessory not to be had with any other series. They provide teaching directions lesson by lesson, and are invaluable in emphasizing silent reading in the primary grades.

THE SILENT READERS

Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth

Many superintendents have enthusiastically stated that these Readers do more for their pupils than any other text-books used. They teach the pupil to read rapidly and with understanding, and thus increase his efficiency in study. They give the pupil power to read and provide tests for rate and comprehension. Once tried these books prove indispensable.

THE WINSTON SIMPLIFIED DICTIONARY

"For compactness, clarity and simplicity, I believe that it has no equal."—Frank P. Graves, President of the University of the State of New York and Commissioner of Education.

No school book published ever received such instant recognition and such widespread use as the WINSTON SIMPLIFIED DICTIONARY—600,000 have been sold to schools in three years. The words are listed in large black type. Each definition is complete and is given in clear, easily understood English. No word is defined in terms of itself or in more difficult words, as is so commonly done in other dictionaries. The WINSTON SIMPLIFIED is a dictionary for school use, prepared by school experts.

HUMAN GEOGRAPHY

by J. Russell Smith

BOOK I, PEOPLES AND COUNTRIES

BOOK II, REGIONS AND TRADE

HUMAN GEOGRAPHY provides a two book study which is continuous. The basis for study is man and the earth as his home. Book I gives the pupil an accurate knowledge of the various PEOPLES AND COUNTRIES, and consequently treats the world as divided into political units—the units man has made. Book II, REGIONS AND TRADE, in developing the broader study of the earth as the home of man, with the various factors which affect his life, industry and trade, utilizes as a unit for study the Human Region—the unit nature has made. In maps, illustrations and teaching material these books are superior to anything hitherto produced.

HERO TALES FROM HISTORY—for fourth or fifth grade.

OUR BEGINNINGS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA—for sixth grade.

THE MAKING OF OUR COUNTRY—for seventh and eighth grades.

These three books form a complete elementary course in history by the same author. The vivid and interesting style of Smith Burnham has won a wide recognition for his books. To appreciate how fascinating and human he has made history for the pupil one must read these splendid volumes. THE MAKING OF OUR COUNTRY has eight full-page reproductions in color of the Ferris historical paintings now in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. No teacher of history can afford to be without these books.

The Publishers' Weekly

THE AMERICAN BOOK TRADE JOURNAL

Founded by F. Leyboldt

July 22, 1922

"I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men of course do seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves, by way of amends, to be a help and ornament thereunto."—BACON.

The American Educational Catalog

THIS issue of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY is devoted to the interests of text-book publishing and the distribution of text-books. The total number of books distributed thru the American schools exceeds all the volumes published thru the trade channels, which gives some indication of the importance of this field if any such evidence were needed. For fifty years the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY has supplied a tool for those who publish and handle textbooks in the form of an index to publications. This is a working tool not available in other fields of literature in that it covers only books in print and in active circulation, while books in other fields have to be traced thru a series of catalogs. The importance of the distribution of text-books seems to justify this special effort, and the list is made as practical as possible by including in its scope only those books that are in active use either as text, supplementary reading, or for general class study. As it is printed this time, the list itself runs over 100 pages without counting the index in which books are classified by subject. This classified index is of value to publishers since from it they may quickly estimate what other books compete with their own in certain fields; it is much used by booksellers who have frequent requests for suggestions as to titles that will supplement textbooks already in use; and it is found valuable by the teachers in tracing new books to supplement those already in their hands. This list is in year round use in the trade, and extra copies in a permanent binding can be had at $1 each. It is important for the growth of the American textbook business that distribution have as many facilities as possible, and it is hoped that many more books will get distributed promptly thru this catalog.

Binding Together by Education

NO action taken at the recent convention of the National Education Association at Boston attracted more general interest than the plan to form an International Education Association that would "federate the numerous educational organizations thruout the world" and would also, it is hoped, act as "a permanent bureau or council of international research."

It was further proposed that this group should take the lead in organizing a world peace exposition, to be held in 1930, at which time "the nations would come together on common ground, bringing the fruits of peace." As a preliminary to this, forty-five countries have been invited to a world conference on education in 1923, the conference to be held just before the annual N. E. A. convention. The program in detail as outlined by the committee covers the following points:

(1) The teaching of international civics, which will acquaint the rising generation with the various points of contact made necessary and facilitated by the modern means of communication and trade.

(2) By the organization of textbook material used in the schools such as will give a more accurate visualization of the dominant traits and ideals of the nations.

(3) Thru the exchange of teachers and thru scholarships to students of foreign countries.

(4) By a program looking to universal education and to character education, conduct and behavior.

(5) Thru an exchange of articles on education setting forth programs and methods used in the various countries and thru an exchange of educational periodicals.

(6) The designation of a day to be observed by all which may be known as "World Good Will Day," upon which programs may be given such as will promote international friendship.

Such a plan would turn the great power of organized education to its highest possible service, and no group could talk in world terms with such good chance of effect on future progress as could the leaders of our school life. No group is so internationally minded as the schools, and their proclamation has had the effect of immediately striking a responsive chord.

Text Book Making

ONE of the most effective and important ways of bringing to the attention of teachers the new books and new school material is to have exhibits at educational conventions, the most important, of course, being the annual meeting of the National Education Association which gathered in Boston this month. In the book exhibit rooms over forty publishers had made displays, covering most of the leading houses in the schoolbook field. Such an exhibit, which is, of course, most carefully prepared in order to show at its best the material offered, gives striking emphasis to the fact that those who produce text-books for our schools have kept steady pace with the needs of all grades and classes. The way in which new developments in teaching and new methods of presenting subjects are promptly translated into textbooks is fine testimony to the alertness of American publishers and shows what keen competition will do to sharpen the initiative of those in the business. To look over a list of school-book projects twenty-five or fifty years ago and compare it with that covered in a school-book list to-day is striking testimony to the broadened conception of school work. No effort is too great to make in the preparation of the books, and no expense is spared.

Probably no product of the printing press is, after its manufacture, viewed with such keenly critical analysis as is the text-book and this criticism is bound to give stimulus to the manufacturing end of the business, the end involving the greatest efforts. The selection of types is a subject of long and careful analysis, the method of obtaining display of text and table or sub-headings and text is studied with great pains. Every publisher knows that his text-book will have twenty rivals and the publishers and salesmen of each will examine his book from its title-page and illustrations to the smallest item in the footnote. It might be well if trade books were subjected to such scrutiny, that they, too, might feel the overshadowing effect of coming criticism.

In no department of manufacture are greater pains taken to-day than in illustrations. There is an increasing realization of the importance of visual education. Primers and readers have colored drawings or half-tones prepared by the very best artists and most careful execution of plates. The inserted illustrations in histories show that no carelessness is allowed to affect the aspect of the smallest cut, the line drawings for science textbooks, the illustrations for botanies and physiologies and the photographs prepared for the geographies—all these show the painstaking efforts that have made the American product a standard for the world.

As school readers stand in their relations to publishers as purchasers to sources of supply, it is not likely that teachers other than those who are authors will spend much time appraising the work of the presses, but the fact that the publishers are an important co-ordinated group of workers in educational progress should not be overlooked, and America can take real pride in what the textbook publishers have done.

The Railroad Situation

IT is perhaps needless, in view of the headlines in every paper in the country, to warn booksellers of the seriousness of the transportation situation and its possible effect on their business plans. Whether the strike increases in its effect or is promptly settled, there is to be a disturbing effect on freight deliveries that will be felt thruout the fall. It behooves every bookseller, whether in the trade field or the text-book field, to give most careful attention to the problem of deliveries. Text-books will have to be started to their field as soon as possible, in order to avoid the coming congestion, and retailers, with the fall and Christmas in sight, need to be as forehanded as possible in getting goods into their shops. Another aspect of the situation, as pointed out by students of the railroad situation, is the pressure for transportation that will come with the settlement of the coal strike. Exclusive of coal, the demand for transportation the last two months has been very high, and railroad equipment is not what it should be in new cars or repairs. If coal should shortly take on full proportions, this pressure will become serious and delays are bound to occur. Every industry must give from now on its most careful attention to this transportation issue.

After War Textbook Publishing

By Charles H. Seaver

Head of the Educational Department of Macmillan & Co.

THE effects of the war on the school-book business were not fully realized until after the war. During the first three years of the war, before American participation, the costs involved in the school-book business gradually rose. This was recognized here and there in certain small adjustments of prices, tho publishers were slow in their appreciation of any change and generally adhered to established prices of books already published. In 1917 and 1918 the rise in costs became more marked. Prices had to be adjusted all along the line but the fetish of the pre-war as the normal was still cherished, and adjustments sufficient to meet the realities of the situation were not ventured. The two years after the war were a precarious period for publishers of school-books, already injured by their slowness to appreciate the tendencies of the times and not fortified against a day of trouble by anticipatory measures. We all expected a speedy return to normalcy and thought we had weathered the worst storms. Then the effects of the war became evident.

Co-operation Might Have Helped

It would be painful to open old wounds, to recite in detail the ills we suffered in those days. We tried to make bricks without straw—books without paper. Much wisdom was left unexpressed for lack of paper, and in those days paper was certainly more precious than wisdom. Compositors, electrotypers, printers, binders took vacations with exasperating indifference or worked with exasperating inefficiency. "A binder, a binder, my kingdom for a binder!" was the cry of many a publisher, and some nearly sacrificed their kingdoms. The labor turnover in offices also increased the publishers' distress. Stories are told of weird and wonderful bookkeeping and shipping. Authors whose manuscript had been put in cold storage during the war now thought them well cured and wanted them published and marketed in spite of almost prohibitive conditions. High on a throne of royal state, dominating the school-book business, it seemed that Satan exalted sat.

Amid such difficulties and with costs 200 per cent greater than those that had prevailed before the war, we were expected to furnish for the schools, with usual promptness, books of unimpaired quality, at prices in many states and other communities fixed by contract or listing when another level of costs prevailed. We tried to obtain mercy or at least justice. We got some concessions. Many school men were sympathetic, but in general the laws as interpreted allowed no relief. Co-operation on the part of the publishers might have mitigated their common distress, but for various reasons general and wholehearted co-operation seemed impossible. In one way or another, however, we all struggled thru.

The years 1921 and 1922 have been years of recovery. The present situation offers several contrasts to the situation that has just been briefly described and five features of the situation may, perhaps, be worthy of mention.

Changing Costs and Prices

(1) Costs have been reduced to some extent and seem to be fairly well stabilized, at least in comparison with the day-by-day shifting costs of the previous few years. Manufacturing costs are probably about two-thirds higher than in 1914 or 1915, but substantially lower than in 1919 and 1920. In manufacturing costs the element of labor has shown little change, but the efficiency of labor has improved; the element of materials has shown considerable change, as in the cases of paper and cloth. Operating cost, working expense, overhead—whatever this necessary part of the cost of school-books may be called—has not fallen to any large extent and seems unlikely to fall, tho the enforced introspection and economy of the war experience may have brought about in some cases more efficient methods and abolished some wasteful practices. The principal elements, salaries and wages, cannot be reduced under present conditions. All who are sincerely and intelligently interested in education believe, I am sure, that the superintendent, the principal, and the teacher, the author and the publisher of textbooks, and the bookman, the missionary of new educational ideas, are all worthy of their hire. Our Salvation Army of the Gospel of Educational Progress, constituted by the organizations of school-book publishers, must be maintained to bring light into dark places, to make wise the simple, and to equalize educational opportunity.

(2) Altho in every other industry increased costs were quickly reflected in increased prices, publishers of school books were slow to respond to the demands of new conditions, as has been noted, on account of the keen competition of the business, the variety and complexity of school-book legislation, and the general optimism that long prevailed. They made advances in prices only when ruin stared them in the face. When relief came, publishers generally charged off losses on stock manufactured at high costs and gave the public the benefit of prices fixed according to the new level of costs. Some publishers had survived the severe ordeal by such a narrow margin that they were unable to respond to new conditions so quickly as others; and others have so called overhead expenses of a questionable character that require high prices; but in general there have been such reductions as the present level of costs justifies, showing that profiteering is not justly chargeable to this business. In every subject text-books of the highest quality in content and manufacture can now be obtained at unquestionably reasonable prices, which are not likely to be substantially lowered in the near future.

Propaganda in Text-books

(3) The market for school books, varying somewhat from year to year according to general business conditions, tho not in any direct relation, seems reasonably steady and not at all discouraging. A serious problem confronting Boards of Education is to meet increasing educational needs with limited taxing possibilities. But there must be provided, in one way or another, adequate school buildings, competent well-trained teachers, and a sufficient supply of suitable textbooks. The cost of textbooks is such a trivial item in the total educational expenditure—probably about 2 per cent.—that the publisher is not likely to be asked to abandon his efforts to keep American textbooks the best in the world or to be discouraged in his mission to incorporate in this form the steady advance in educational thought and practice for the increasing millions of children who pass thru our schools.

(4) The term "propaganda" came into general use during the war. There was pro-German propaganda pro-Ally propaganda, then government propaganda, peace propaganda, Democratic propaganda, Republican propaganda, Socialist propaganda, prohibition propaganda, Bolshevik propaganda, and so on in profusion. There was much silly talk along with useful agitation. For instance, I attended a schoolmasters' meeting in 1917 at which a New York lawyer pointed out the terrible menace of a reader used in American schools. It contained a story in which Frederick the Great of Prussia figured in a favorable light. If Greece and Italy had joined the enemy, what should we have done in those days to Homer's "Iliad" and to Caesar's "Commentaries"? School books were examined with high-power microscopes for words or phrases which, with or without their setting, might be construed as pro-German or anti-Allies, or pro-Socialist, or pro- or anti-something else. The habit of looking for propaganda in school books, or conversely of insisting that propaganda be placed in school books, has not yet reached pre-war proportions but is certainly waning. If any authors and publishers yielded to the pro-British propaganda of the war period to the extent of emphasizing the British side of the controversy that led to the American Revolution and depreciating the cause of the Revolutionists, they now confront an anti-British propaganda at least equally vigorous and most embarrassing. This is but one example of propaganda and counter-propaganda. With Vierecks, Stevensons, Forrests, and other professional propagandists busy earning their living in this interesting profession, what are the publishers to do? The temptation to aid and abet the agitators when, in any case, our interest happens to lie that way is almost irresistible, but a vicious practice thus encouraged, and experience has already shown that those who applaud one inquisition may be the victims of the next. The temptation also to sacrifice truth and justice in weakly yielding to propaganda has been alluring to some authors and publishers. One is reminded of the candidate for a teaching position in a rural community in a state that need not be named who was asked by the examining trustee whether he taught that the earth was round or flat. He replied, "I am prepared to teach either, according to local sentiment." In regard to propaganda of the sorts I have mentioned, if authors and publishers steered a straight course, fairly considering all criticisms but trimming their sails to none of the current breezes that would blow them outside such a course, they would find their own interests and the interest of the school book business and the interest of education, in the long run, best served.

The Choice of School-books

(5) School men and bookmen whose experience gives them a good perspective, who can compare present conditions with those of fifteen or twenty or twenty-five years ago, have noted a real change in the relations of school-book business to the school world, in the ways and means of choosing textbooks and of securing the choice of them. The ideal of the choice of textbooks according to merit and the submission of them on the basis of their merit would exclude from competition the greater part of our textbooks and perhaps some publishers altogether, but yet it would allow some range to school authorities and publishers on account of disagreement among experts as to educational methods and the demand for progress thru experimentation. While no such ideal, of course, is fully realizable, school men and school-book publishers ought to join in keeping it before themselves, and in prizing it as an ideal, ought to resent and to combat the scorning of it.

Our Minds Like Houses

School books are submitted and adopted by human beings, it is true, rather than by disembodied intelligences. We might compare our minds even in this highly intelligent age to the old-fashioned houses that many of us knew in our youth. There is the parlor of reason, in which we take great pride but which we seldom enter, except on extraordinary occasions. There is the sitting-room, a sociable place where we spend much time in adjusting ourselves to our environments and entertaining our friends and acquaintances. There is the dining room where we take in mental food and drink, nutritious and unnutritious, furnished by publishers, or by the N. E. A., or from other sources. There is the bedroom where we rest, which some of us occupy almost continuously. There is the attic where the outworn furniture, old clothes, and rubbish of our minds are stored. School books are sometimes offered and adopted in the parlor by a thoro rational process, as has been found to be fairly possible under proper administration and as is, of course, highly desirable. More often these things are done in the sitting-room or dining-room in very human and not altogether deplorable ways, with perhaps brief excursions to the parlor. Then, too, school men may be mentally bedridden or somnolent and cannot be waked up, especially when publishers and bookmen are likewise disposed. Some also live so much in their mental attics that old prejudices rule them. But let us try earnestly at least to keep text-book adoptions from being made in the cellar. There may have been some re-action after the war—a little more license for the continuance or revival of practices that were gradually becoming outlawed in the school-book business; but in the long run, superintendents of schools, text-book commissions, and other school authorities still show increasing unwillingness to participate in or to countenance the prostitution of their positions and of their schools in this way, while the standards of publishers in general have certainly risen within the past twenty-five years and most of them are more regardful than ever of the good repute of the school-book business.

In summary: we have put behind us our troubles and liquidated our losses of several disturbed and disturbing years. We face new conditions different from those that prevailed before the war, in some respects worse, in most respects better. Significant features of our present situation, as I have mentioned, are the stabilizing of costs on a level below those of the war period but above those of the pre-war period; the adjustment of prices on a corresponding level; the steadiness of the school-book market; the gradual subsidence of propaganda affecting school books; and the persistence, even in a time of reaction and in spite of many exceptions, of high standards among school men and bookmen as to the conduct of the school-book business. We all recognize and are studying the realities of today and should be fully conscious that the so-called war period has left permanent effects which we must take into our reckoning. The war was not a mere parenthesis, and pre-war conditions will, of course, never return. The old is not the normal. What is normal is change and development.

Robinson Advocates New Education

JAMES HARVEY ROBINSON, author of "The Mind in the Making" (Harpers) advocated a new form of education which will cultivate both the scientific and humanistic frame of mind of the young, in an address before a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Salt Lake City. Such an educational system he said, would avoid the frequent discussions which have been waged recently over evolution. "We need some new organized effort to bring together in an imaginative and novel manner the prevailing and sometimes conflicting knowledge of the material world, its fundamental nature as it is coming to be understood in the light of the astonishing new theories of matter itself; the general story of life, with some attention to the great classes of living creatures; the discoveries in regard to man's nature and functioning and the history of his achievements and perplexities."

IT SEEMS as if everyone who could write a war book had been about it. The list is now almost complete. Among the recent foreign works for which English publication has been arranged by Curtis Brown are:

Signor Nitti.—"Peaceful Europe."

M. Poincaré.—"The Origins of the War."

General Denikin.—"Memoirs of the Russian Revolution."

A set of Comparative Tables from 1878 to the World War of 1914, showing the chief events in the civilized world compiled by the ex-Kaiser William II of Germany.

The Stimulation of Outside Reading Among High School Pupils

By Helen W. Cosgrove

Horace Mann School, Teachers' College, Columbia University

WHAT children, especially children of High School age, shall read outside of school, and how they shall be encouraged to read more and better books, are questions that are challenging everyone at all interested in children and books. Mine, naturally, is the teacher's viewpoint, and I should like to present to you for consideration, and possibly discussion, some conclusions I have reached in regard to the stimulation of outside reading among high school pupils. First, the purpose of reading is fun and more fun; second, the major purpose of an English teacher is to make reading fun and in order to do this she needs to be a book expert; third the way to stimulate children to read is to help them find fun of an increasingly higher type.

Reading For Fun

First the purpose of reading is fun and more fun. I have used the word fun purposely instead of our more academic term pleasure. Can you remember when you first read "Robinson Crusoe," or "Little Women," or "David Copperfield." Wasn't it fun to live with the characters, to laugh when they laughed, to cry when they cried, to do brave deeds or have thrilling adventures? Didn't you ever rise from extreme poverty to the epitome of luxury, overcoming innumerable obstacles with an Alger hero; or go thru innumerable colleges with a Patty or a Frank Merriwell? Haven't you fought battles with Ivanhoe, walked to the guillotine with Sydney Carton, mourned the lost gold with Silas Marner, and rebelled with Carol Kennicott, or agonized with Alice Adams? Wasn't it all fun? On the other hand, can you remember when you looked up all the new words in the first three chapters of "Treasure Island," studied the paragraphs, bisected the characters, and trisected the plot until the joy was gone out of it, and how you gradually came to build a wall between the books you studied in school and those you read by yourself for fun. The last situation is undoubtedly exaggerated, but the fact remains that children do regard reading in school and outside of school as two entirely separate activities.

In the early part of May candidates for admission to Horace Mann in the following year present themselves with their credentials for examination, and members of different departments meet them and question them, to find out if they are fitted for the work of the department in that particular grade. Among the candidates last year was a little girl, aged 15, whom we will call Margery for convenience, accompanied by her mother. When I asked, "Do you like to read?" I got an enthusiastic affirmative "What do you read?" "Good books, the classics," came in affected tones accompanied by approving smiles from mother. "What do you mean by good books?" Margery started to explain but her mother interrupted, "Aren't you acquainted with the classics? I should think it was your place to know," and launched into a lengthy description of the complete set of the World's Best Literature, which she had just purchased. Later, when Margery handed in her written work I had a chance to ask another question. "What do you read just for fun?" Her face brightened. "Oh, my brothers' books, the Boy Scout Series, they're great; and I just love 'Swiss Family Robinson.' 'Ivanhoe' is great too. I like knights and fighting." Then she added "that is a good book, too."

"Good" Books

That term "good book" I somehow find very objectionable. It has an insincere, snobbish connotation and suggests as arbitrary separation into sheep and goats. It doesn't seem to me culture is as simple a thing as having read a certain list of standard books, the Five-foot Bookshelf of advertising fame for instance. It seems to me that the essential thing is an honest taste for reading just books, and a good book will be a matter of self-determination on the part of each individual. It is a term very much qualified by the time, place and person. For little John from East One Thoiy-thoid Street, coming to me in the summer session, "The Motor Boat Boy" was a very good book. He could think and talk nothing but boats and motors, so we thrilled over Jack and his pals on the motor boat where something happens on every page. We agreed that thrilling things happen on the sea and I suggested "Captains Courageous." For two days there was silence. Then came remarks. "Gee, that fellow likes boys, don't he? Did he write more stories like that?" I had to admit no more sea stories just like that, but put several volumes of Kipling in easy reach. However, near the Kipling lay a volume by Terhune, "Bruce, a War Dog."

* Paper read at the recent N. E. A. Convention in Boston.

That went the rounds and the cry was for more animal stories. The hope would be that the Motor Boat series was a thing of the past and that he was ready for a classic, but he probably wasn't. However, those boys found their books sincerely good, and tested both books and authors by a safe and honest standard—their nearness to life.

Altho all the emphasis thus far has been on the fun element, there are, of course, the usual criteria which we all grant. However, I do not believe that the presence of any one or all of these is a justifiable reason for choosing a book for a child if the book is not going to be fun. The "Vicar of Wakefield" may furnish much valuable information and increase the reader's vocabulary, or "Adam Bede" may give excellent opportunity for judging actions and drawing morals; but if the fun in the reading isn't there, the child doesn't get these things.

"Ice Cream Stories"

Academically we may raise our eyebrows at Zane Grey, but he has given many an eastern boy his only acquaintance with cowboy and rancher on the Western plains. John Fox, Jr., has made many of us who might never have the privilege or opportunity, know the mountain folk of the South. Mark Twain had left none of us unable to experience the feelings of a real live haram-scarum boy. If breadth of mind means the taking into consideration of other points of view then these books certainly widen the experience. Honoré Willsie's "Enchanted Canyon" may fall short in many respects of becoming a classic, but the reader is entertainingly informed about the Grand Canyon and about a great deal of the work of the Department of the Interior. History books can give all that, but you know that facts, situations and problems that form the background of a gripping story are more real and consequently more lasting.

Seeing one of Ralph Barbour's books on the desk of one of the boys in the summer school I asked, "Why do you always read Barbour's books?" "Because I like the fellows in them," came the answer. "Why do you like them?" "Because they always play square. They do the right thing." Sam and a great many others are at the point where they like their heroes perfect, and the villain must always be properly punished. From that point of view actions are judged; but the very fact that the young readers begin to judge actions, even from so obvious a standard, is a point in favor.

I do not mean by all this that I do not make any distinctions between books. I most certainly do, and I think the fun in the game for the teacher is helping the child to find those distinctions, but I have come more and more to believe that if we are going to stimulate children to better and better reading, we must meet them on their own level whatever it is, and help them to climb up. My girls of three years ago put the case rather aptly and the phrase still clings in the classes. After a time they began to dub many books that were reported on "ice cream stories," and explained the phrase by saying that some books were very nice while they lasted but they left only a flat taste afterwards. So we began to look for books that had the fun of the "ice cream tale," but which in addition gave us something fine and real beside. Some of the booklists prepared by those classes, I think, show that some at least are climbing up to pure fun in reading.

Keeping Up With Literature

Is there anyone who hasn't had the experience of being asked all in five minutes, "Where can I find some more good sea stories? I like books with lots of fights. What's the name of a good detective story? My mother says ghost stories aren't good for me to read. Why not? Did you ever read any of Ethel Dell's books? Who wrote some good stories about the French Revolution?" I think it's a not unusual occurrence for many of us, and it is the reason for my second contention—the English teacher needs to be a book expert.

It goes without saying that we must love to read and have read much, and that our reading must be catholic. I'd like to add here, if I may, a very necessary postscript to an English teacher's background, I think it might well be a prayer—"Dear Lord, let me never forget the books I read in my youth, classics or no; and let me never forget the thrill of a first attack on a thoroly good story." For if we've forgotten the first joy of "Tom Sawyer" or "Treasure Island," can we ever share it with a group? An English teacher can't afford to let good stories become old.

"Keeping up with Literature," when 100 wide-awake girls set the pace, I find is no small task tho I had thought that I read quite a little. With limited time then, what is the best way to know all the available material? There are many aids which I'll name over, tho probably most of them are familiar: The publications of the High School Librarians' Association; the A. L. A. Booklist; The Children's Bookshop Lists (published by the Women's Industrial Union, Boston); the Boy Scout List; individual lists of various schools which one gathers from one's locality. Let me say in passing that such lists are primarily for the teacher and not to be placed promiscuously in children's hands.

Current literature is just as important "to keep up with," especially when one considers the number and popularity of magazines published. One class of thirty girls last March reported over 100 magazines read in their homes. Of course it is impossible to know and read all, but one should have the monthly habit of dropping in at the library and reading the best standard ones. Other helps for keeping in touch with the newest in literature are the book reviews in the papers (Saturday edition of the Evening Post and Sunday Times and Tribune in the vicinity of New York); book reviews in the magazines, such as the Atlantic's Bookshelf; book adds in magazines where full reviews and quotations from reviews are frequently given; publishers' catalogs; and lastly, the Booklist published monthly by the A. L. A.

A Book Forum

Now, for the third point. How is one going to help children find more and more fun of an increasingly higher type? Three years ago I started in my present position, and one of the first questions raised in one of my fourth year or Sophomore classes concerned outside reading. Was I going to inquire outside reading? How many per month would I require? Would I post lists? What kind of written reports did I want? One of the very few instructions I had received as a new teacher was "encourage them to read." My experience in the past with posted lists and lengthy reports had not been too satisfactory. To the first question I countered, "Aren't you all reading anyway?" "But those don't count," was the answer. "Why not? Why shouldn't they?" Would I count them? Before I could consider an answer, "Let's not have reports; let's talk about them instead," came. And so what amounted to a book forum started, in which we mutually discussed the books we'd read and tried to pass on the best of a story that had thrilled us so that the rest would want to thrill too. It was in this connection the phrase "ice cream story" started after a number of best-sellers, so-called, had proved thin and flat discussion material, and of a remarkable sameness. Gradually thru the free, and sometimes alarmingly frank discussions, standards began to evolve, which, tho the did not prevent or cure light reading, caused it to be evaluated almost invariably at its true worth.

Most of the success of this beginning venture with outside reading, I lay to the fact that the first book on the list for class study in that year was the "Tale of Two Cities," which is most admirably adapted to group discussion, and that after all, is only the kind of conversation we all like best. The class work almost invariably colors the outside reading somewhat, if not in type, in author. For instance, the fire of revolt in Dickens' tale led to more stories of that period—"The Reds of the Midi" and "The Scarlet Pimpernel," even to some reading in Carlisle's history which I slipped on to the class reserve shelf; spread out into stories about France and by French authors; and eventually was replaced by reading of dramas, because the class work had marched on thru some Shakespeare, "The Rivals," and "Beau Brummel" by Fitch. That in turn gave way to the making of short story bibliographies when our class book was "Atlantic Narratives" (second series).

Since we were spending so much time and thought on this reading, the need arose for some way of keeping track of it in order to give credit. The regulation library card was finally adopted as being most convenient for the girls and for me. It was easy to check and easily taken care of, for many girls began to keep individual lists in card boxes. At first it was filled out bearing the following heads: Title, author, setting, characters (important only), plot (one sentence), and comment.

"The Green Vegetable Department"

What I have just described of one group was more or less typical of the others, for of course the idea spread and has persisted. To have the reaction the same would be to expect what we all know is the impossible in dealing with human beings; but the principle of free and informal discussion in class groups had remained. Instead of individual lists, with a posting from time to time of class lists, this year each class kept a box in which all the groups filed their cards for the year, and that box was accessible to any member who wished a suggestion for something to read. One group this year introduced the discussion of movies and plays the members had seen; another became interested in the writers of the books, an interest that led into reading biographies; still another freshman group, having become interested in the word "bibliography" pursued the making of bibliographies for several months. The discussions that attended this interest and the resulting wide spread reading were gratifying. That same group started and conducted during this year a circulating library which they called the green vegetable department in contrast to the guaranteed canned goods to be procured in the school library. Need I say the books were largely modern? The initiation fee was a book; lending fee, five cents a week.

Altho the group work just described was the biggest single part of the problem of outside reading, there are many other helps, all of which you are no doubt in the habit of using. An illustrated edition or an especially well-bound edition of some story brought into class and talked over, rarely fails to bring a response and creates in many a desire for ownership. A reserve shelf in the library, or in some easily accessible spot if the school has no library, is another help. Finding a shelf of interesting books, relating to a class discussion, right at hand frequently starts an interest that might never have come to life if one had had to hunt the shelves over to locate material; and the interest is later often voluntarily pursued.

Before leaving the point altogether, I want to say an especial word about poetry. Young people frequently have an aversion to it as being difficult to understand, but that doesn't happen if they hear it first and learn to like it that way. For adults even, poetry is best read aloud, and where read silently the one who is enjoying it is constantly aware of its aural qualities. So if we would have poetry on their book lists and shelves, it is my belief we must read it aloud and have it read beginning with those in which the rhythm is strong and the story easy, like Noyes' "Highway Man," Kipling's "Ballad of East and West" or "Gunga Din." Collections such as "Poems of Action," Jessie Rittenhouse's anthologies, or "One Hundred Narrative Poems" (Lake Classics) are good for desk and reserve shelf. Poetry, more than any other type of literature, it seems to me, requires of us that we meet the individual on a common level, make the joy and the fun most apparent, and climb up with him.

The big point then that I would like to make in this connection, is the one I stumbled on by accident. The most successful way to stimulate reading by children is to get into the fun with them, thrill with them, laugh with them; help them carry on and carry on with them the kind of conversation we all enjoy most—a give and take of opinions of the books we read and the plays we see. That is what they are going to be doing when they leave school rather than analysing paragraphs and outlining plots. So I would like to conclude with the ideas with which I started: the purpose of reading is fun and more fun; the major purpose of an English teacher is to make reading fun, and in order to do this she needs to be a book expert; the way to stimulate children to read is to help them find fun and more fun of a higher type.

"The Child's Own Reading"

By Frederic G. Melcher

Chairman of the Children's Book Week Committee

IF there is truth in the saying that there is no such thing as a free lunch, then education and catastrophe, we shall find common must perpetually be a race between education and catastrophe. It is the children who must be groomed for the race. Opinions may differ, however, as to the regimen to be offered to the young people, the character and theory of coaching, and also as to the value of children's own theories of preparation. The catastrophe which is to be avoided is not wholly food shortage, but, what we fear even more, a lessened vision or a decreased faculty of leadership.

A short time ago I was visiting a western library and was to be shown a collection of books that had been gathered from a Children's Book Week display, a collection made to show how much foreign countries had contributed to our reading heritages. While the book cases, which were in the back of a lecture room, were being opened, I heard a teacher talking to a University Extension Division about Browning's life and education, emphasizing the fact that Browning's education had been personal and informal and not in class groups. This, the teacher thought, gave new emphasis to the old saying that the ideal education consisted of Mark Hopkins at one end of the log and a pupil at the other. If there is any pedagogical saying that gives me continued irritation, it is the Mark Hopkins anecdote—the argument that only by individual tutoring can genius be developed. Such conditions of teaching will never exist, and one wonders whether we must forever consider our class groups as a handicap to effective education. I could not but think as the teacher spoke, that if there had been children in the room instead of advanced students they could have turned to those book shelves and found a way to every part of the globe, to every literature, to every type of writing. Surely with such chance for individual enthusiasm and development as can come from open-shelf reading, there need be no fear of levelling, or that the bright minds must be pulled down to the speed of the others.

If we can but develop in our classes the habit of general reading while we are teaching the ability to read, there need be no handicap to individual growth. Turn for example, to the book-list on the ballot for the Two-Foot Book Shelf, which has been in your hands today. Cannot a future leader of national affairs get inspiration from "The Hero Tales of American History?" Cannot the boy with the pull of the sea in his veins get some sense of its power from "The Cruise of the Cachalot"? Cannot the girls who are to be our home-makers get some conception of the fineness of real home life from "Little Women"? Or cannot the future business man see the characteristics of good human judgment in such a volume as "The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin"? Open shelf reading in school might be called the cafeteria method where we put some reliance on the taste and palate of those who come by the table. It is for us to see that the menu is balanced and that the cooking and ingredients are good.

Books and Internationalism

This morning's papers record prominently that this Conference has gone on record in favor of an International Educational Congress to be held next year. A congress which will emphasize anew the binding power of schools and of books. Perhaps the ground work for such a getting together of nations has already been laid in the children's reading. Are not the picture books of Boutet de Monvel, of Caldecott, or of Larssen giving the children an insight into the ways of other countries? Are not stories such as "Heidi," "Pinocchio" or "The Story of Mankind" giving them knowledge of lands afar? Are not the older ones thru such books as "The Three Musketeers", "David Copperfield" or "Lorna Doone" getting some conception of the lives of other nations? and will not these open shelves of the literature of other nations grow steadily until our children shall have become internationally minded and internationally tolerant? This school book shelf will not only grow in its own capacity but also with the school's ever increasing contact with the book collections of the public library and the growing interest on the part of both schools and libraries in the increase of home book collections.

It was in an effort to increase the co-operative power of the different groups interested in the increase in reading that Children's Book Week was first developed. In four years the movement has grown to be of national importance among those who work with children; librarians, parents, teachers, scout leaders, churches. It has also become of increasing and genuine interest to the boys and girls themselves. It was four years ago, at a convention on this same Copley Square where we are now gathered, that Franklin K. Mathiews, Chief Librarian of the Boy Scouts of America, made the first suggestion of this plan. It was my privilege to help in its development by having close contact with booksellers and librarians and a very personal interest in the matter as a parent. The book publishers of the country, who are leading the world in the amount of intelligent interest paid to children's needs, were from the start actively co-operative.

We are asked sometimes why such an effort should be encompassed in a "Week." There is a little feeling today that "weeks" are not as effective a medium as once they were, but it should be remembered that while we all want the increase in children's reading to be a year round growth, still it is impossible to capture the public's attention over a long period, and it is certainly impossible to get newspaper or other space except over some such limited period. In a "Week" also it is possible to get all interested groups together and to introduce into the event some of the play spirit that will dramatize the idea in the minds of parents and children. November is selected for the date because the new books are stocked in larger quantities and are fresher at that time. Besides this, Christmas giving is just ahead.

Better Books In the Home

Children's Book Week has certain characteristics as a promotion effort that I should like to emphasize. In the first place the plan has complete flexibility; the Committee in charge, which is made up of representatives of many interests, has no fixed program for all communities, and any idea that will work is a good idea to encourage. The Committee is able, by its circulars, to pass the good ideas from any one place to committees where it can be of increasing value. Each year we need new suggestions and plans by which to give new aspects to the movement. In some communities they call the occasion "Good Book Week" so that the older boys and girls do not feel excluded. In some cities the movement takes on a full community aspect, in others it is only one section or group that gets started to use the occasion to its full advantage. Secondly, the movement stands for no standardized list of children's reading, altho it encourages the publication of lists by any competent organization. It would not be well to crystalize into any one list of titles the whole effort to increase reading, and certainly no one is competent to draw the definitive list. It is to be hoped that children's libraries will grow by the attention to old titles and to new, to imaginative literature and to informative literature. Parents do need concrete suggestions when their interest is aroused; for that reason lists are of great value.

Thirdly, this movement does not wish to be labeled an up-lift movement with the present stigma that sometimes attaches to that name. The Committee might have used for its slogan "Better Books in the Home." That is really the purpose. But the wording "More Books in the Home" keeps it from coming under suspicion of the children themselves. It is our belief that wherever there is discussion of children's reading, there is discussion of better children's reading, and only in cases where there is no discussion do "wooden" books get their chance. Again the movement has stood for a program that would supply a background of publicity for local efforts. To the best of their ability, the Central Committee tries to inspire attention in newspapers, magazines, among the critics and columnists, on magazine covers and by lectures, to children's reading. Such general publicity creates the atmosphere on which local effort can thrive. If more could be done to bring good lecturers or authors or authorities on children's reading or parents themselves to the platforms during the Week of November 12, great good would be accomplished.

Again the Committee tries to supply concrete material that will enable local groups, schools, libraries or bookstores to draw the public to the problem of children's reading. The Jessie Willcox Smith poster, designed for the first campaign, is still in active use, because it is still the most effective weapon we have. The poster, of which I am sure you have seen reproductions, gives the feeling of the delight children can have in growing up among plenty of books. Fifteen thousand of these posters will be distributed this year; it is also made in post card size and sold at the nominal price of 50 cents a hundred for the use of local committees. Streamers, thousands of circulars, suggesting plans for the celebration, are also sent out. A very favorite suggestion has been the building of Thomas Bailey Aldrich book cases, of which a sample is in the next room. This book case is a replica of one in the old memorial house in Portsmouth, the working plan supplied by Mrs. Aldrich. Boys and girls will be interested to make such cases for their own walls.

The Way to Celebrate the Week

Interesting programs have been got up of plays with book characters, or costume parties with many children dressed like the people in their favorite books. There have been competitions in essays on reading, with prizes, perhaps, of books offered by local stores. There have been competitions in lists of books, sometimes lists of what the child actually has at home. There have been competitions in poster designing or book plates. Samples of such book-plates, which were made in Providence, are on exhibit. In many cases there have been authors' lectures, usually in the school assembly or in library lecture rooms. Women's clubs have put the subject of children's books on their programs, ministers have talked to Sunday Schools about books on Sunday morning.

From our headquarters teachers can get material and suggestions, and from here the connections with various organizations are built up. Any teacher who wishes to turn this annual observance to her school's advantage will find that she can get co-operative interest, not only from the libraries, but from women's clubs, Sunday Schools, booksellers, boy scouts and other groups.

To Train Leaders

I cannot venture into full detail of the many ideas that have been successfully used in Children's Book Week observances. It is usually easy to get moving picture houses to put on a book film and to flash an announcement of the Week. In these and in a score of other ways, the interest in books can be dramatized. As has been said by a previous speaker, the idea of more good reading is "catching," and nothing makes the interest in children's good reading so interesting as to enter into Book Week with a real play spirit. This will give to parents and children the idea that reading is a joyous thing, that it is "good fun," as Miss Cosgrove has said. To make reading "good fun" for a large group of young people is a thing well worth any effort. Such an effort will bring about a broadening of the vision instead of the narrowing of the individual.

We should not forget also that by creating a greater audience, we are also creating literature itself, for the creator of literature is drawn out by the appreciation of literature, the author needs the audience as much as the audience needs the author.

While we have been sitting here you have been looking, as I have, at this great painting on the front wall. Perhaps you have thought that it was a bold artist who selected for his subject that view from old Beacon Hill, centering across the roofs of Boston's North End of a century and more ago, with hundreds of houses just alike, hundreds of chimneys in serried rows, yet the artist has brought out of such a vista a feeling of real dramatic interest and power. Do we not sometimes look at the rows of children in our school rooms and think of them as thirty or forty heads of a size and minds of a kind? And yet each boy and girl is as different as are these homes of Boston's old North End were different, and just as out of old Boston came the leaders that made their impress on New England and on the Nation, so out of our class room groups will come new leaders if they are given the chance to see the vision, a vision which can come to them from open shelves of books, which the schools, libraries and booksellers can put into existence in every corner of the land by co-operative enthusiasm.

The American Ideal

"THE American ideal," said Secretary Hughes, in a paper read before the National Educational Association at its recent convention, and it "must be maintained if we are to mitigate disappointment and unrest, is the ideal of equal educational opportunity, not merely for the purpose of enabling one to know how to earn a living and to fit into an economic status more or less fixed, but of giving play to talent and aspiration and to the development of mental and spiritual powers.

"It is not likely that there will be lack of opportunity for vocational education, for the sort of training which will fit men and women to earn a living. The exigencies of our complex life are too apparent and the rewards too obvious to admit of neglect; and we shall have whatever vocational or technical schools are required. But democracy cannot live on bread alone. It is not enough that one shall be able to earn a living, or a good living. This is the foundation, but not the structure. What is needed is to have life more abundantly.

"From the standpoint of the individual, the exclusively materialistic view is inadmissible, for the individual life should be enriched with the ampler resources of a wider culture. What is most important, however, in view of our social and civic needs, is that the door of hope should be kept open by maintaining the opportunities and standards of general education, thus giving those who start amid the direst necessities and with the most slender advantages the chance to rise. This is of especial importance to our working people, who are not to be viewed as mere economic units, but as co-laborers in the great enterprise of human progress. The American ideal—and it must be maintained if we are to mitigate disappointments and unrest—is the ideal of equal educational opportunity, not merely for the purpose of enabling one to know how to earn a living and to fit into an economic status more or less fixed, but of giving play to talent and aspiration and to the development of mental and spiritual powers.

"When we consider the true object of education, to give the training which will enable one to make the most—that is the best—of one's self, we must realize that the foundation should be laid in a few studies of the highest value, in self-discipline, and that there should be supplied every incentive to attain that mental and spiritual culture which connotes, not merely knowledge and skill, but character. This means self-denial, hard work, the inspiration of teachers with vision, and an appreciation of the privileges and obligations of citizenship in democracy.

"In the elementary schools it means that sort of training which insists, at whatever cost, on the mastery by the student of the subject before him, on accuracy—the lack of which, I regret to say, is now conspicuous in students of all grades—the correct use of our language and the acquisition of that modicum of information which every one should possess.

"In the secondary schools (our high schools and academies) it means that we should stop scattering. There is at present a bewildering and unsuccessful attempt at comprehensiveness. It fails of its purpose in giving neither adequate information nor discipline. It asks too much of the student, and too little. I believe that we need to have a few fundamental, substantial studies which are thoroughly mastered. I am one of those who believe in the classical and mathematical training, and I do not think that we have found any satisfactory substitute for it. But the important point is the insistence upon concentration and thoroughness. The function of the secondary school is not to teach everything but really to teach something, to lay the basis for the subsequent, and more definitely specialized, intellectual endeavor.

"I think, also, that we have done too much to encourage intellectual vagrancy in college. Of course, there should be opportunity to select courses having in view definite scholastic aims, but we have gone so far that a college education, outside of technical schools, may mean little or nothing. It is a time for reconstruction and for the establishment of definite requirements by which there will be secured better mental discipline, more accurate information, and appropriate attention to the things of deepest value which make for the enrichment of the whole life of the student."

A PROPOS of the publication of Edith M. Hull's second novel "The Shadow of the East," the Curtis Brown News Sheet comments on the publication of "The Sheikh." "The history of this first novel seems significant, and encouraging, proving clearly enough that a 'name' and 'pull with the critics' and 'influence with the publishers,' and all the rest of the ritual of the authors who are 'in the know' does not really, after all, necessarily amount to much. We would far rather have a novel from an unknown author who has something new and interesting to say, and knows how to say it, and has taken pains to say it, than the sophisticated kind of work from someone who knows all the publishers and critics, and can get good reviews."

Books for the Country School

AS a means of developing constructive discussion on the possibility of having a general bookshelf in every schoolhouse, the American Library Association and the School Library Section of the National Education Association undertook to have a vote among those who attended the two recent conventions as to what twenty-five books should be first put on such a shelf. This bookshelf was not intended to contain either reference books or textbooks, and the Bible and the dictionary were excluded as being part of every school's equipment. In order to make the voting easier, the ballot was prepared with 100 suggested titles on it with blanks where other titles could be added. This list included not only accepted classics for children but many books of information and history and nature that had proved their worth. The full list of the 100 suggested was printed in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY of July 1, 1922. The ballot has just been counted, and the twenty-five suggested are as follows:

1. Alcott. "Little Women."
2. Carroll. "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass."
3. Defoe. "Robinson Crusoe."
- 4-5. Stevenson. "Treasure Island."
- 4-5. Twain. "Tom Sawyer."
6. Nicolay. "Boys' Life of Abraham Lincoln."
7. Kipling. "Jungle Book."
8. Andersen. "Fairy Tales."
9. Aesop's "Fables."
- 10-11. Pyle. "Merry Adventures of Robin Hood."
- 10-11. Stevenson. "Child's Garden of Verse."
12. Lamb. "Tales from Shakespeare."
13. "Arabian Nights."
- 14-15. Malory. "Boys' King Arthur."
- 14-15. Van Loon. "Story of Mankind."
16. Wiggin. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."
17. Stevenson, B. E. "Home Book of Verse for Young Folks."
18. Dickens. "Christmas Carol."
- 19-20. Irving. "Rip Van Winkle."
- 19-20. "Mother Goose."
- 21-22. Dodge. "Hans Brinker."
- 21-22. Hagedorn. "Boys' Life of Theodore Roosevelt."
- 23-24. Hawthorne. "Wonderbook for Boys and Girls."
- 23-24. Seton. "Wild Animals I Have Known."
25. Spyri. "Heidi."

There are many interesting and significant things in this list, and it will certainly be seen that a shelf of this character would easily give a range of reading for young people of almost any grade school age. There is material for little children like "Mother Goose" and "Heidi" and for older children like "Little Women" or "The Story of Mankind." It will be seen that the vote included practically none of the informational books that were on the list. This is probably a significant testimony of the general feeling that it is the books of imagination and vision that children can get most from as a supplement to their textbooks.

This judgment by the elders was emphasized by a vote taken at Detroit during the library convention by Miss Massee, who asked a roomful of children of the seventh and eighth grades to give their vote from the list. There was but a small vote for the informational books; but "Treasure Island" and "Tom Sawyer" led the list. One book that was included by the children's vote that did not get into the twenty-five here was "Tom Brown's School Days," which ran sixth, the only school boy story that appeared in either list. The strong vote for "Little Women" was very interesting and shows the place of Miss Alcott in the affections of everyone. "Rebecca" also got a good vote as another book that both girls and boys delight in. The appearance of "The Story of Mankind" by Van Loon, only a year out, adds a title that covers a vast field that has never been so well done from the young people's point of view.

Andersen is the favorite among fairy tales. Perhaps the disappearance of Grimm is a reaction from the war. Undoubtedly Mr. Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse" would be the best general collection that the bookshelf could have, but the heavy vote for "Child's Garden of Verses" puts that in a strong place. The two biographies that have received the vote are Nicolay's "Lincoln" and Hagedorn's "Roosevelt," and the famous classics have an excellent representation in the "Arabian Nights," "Boys' King Arthur," "Robinson Crusoe," Aesop's Fables and the "Wonderbook." It is to be hoped that those who can start the active work in establishing such bookshelves in the schoolrooms of the country will push the movement forward, and book-sellers can help in this by reprinting the list, pricing it and bringing the matter to the attention of people who can be interested.

Graded List of Books for Children

A BOOKLIST of unusual importance and value has just come from the office of the American Library Association in Chicago, "Graded List Of Books For Children," prepared by the Elementary School Library Committee of the National Education Association. This project was started several years ago by Effie L. Power and the plan provided for a list approximating 1000 books, annotated and intended for the first nine grades of school.

The list has been prepared with the needs of both teacher and librarian in mind, and as the books are intended for home reading, its value to the parents will be obvious.

No textbooks as such are included, but many of the books are taken from the lists of textbook publishers.

As printed, there are 800 titles in all, of which about 285 come from the textbook houses or departments.

The booklist is divided into three sections: 131 books for grades 1-3; 260 books for grades 4-6; 410 books for grades 7-9. The annotations, finely selected, are credited to the Committee consisting of Annie S. Cutter of the School Department of the Cleveland Public Library, chairman; Jasmine Britton, Los Angeles; Nina C. Brotherton, Carnegie Library School, Pittsburgh; Anne Eaton, Lincoln School Library, New York; Orton Lowe, Director of English, Harrisburg Schools.

The staff of the American Library Association has added a subject index which will increase the usefulness of the list, and there is a directory of the seventy-nine publishers whose books are included. There is an out-of-print list which suggests many titles that would have been included if the books had been in print.

Books For Junior High

DISCUSSIONS at recent library and teachers' conventions have emphasized the development of the high school library field, and the New England School Library Association has just printed, thru the H. R. Huntting Co., an excellent "Book List for Junior High School Libraries" which can be purchased for five cents. The list is a pamphlet of twelve pages, edited by Martha Wilson, librarian of the Lincoln Library, Springfield, Ill. The list is classified and includes a number of books in almost every field.

A feature of the book that will be appreciated by the retailer is the page suggesting how libraries and teachers should make out orders that they may be most expeditiously and accurately handled. The form suggested is as follows:

Mr. Cuddihy Knighted

THE French Government has conferred on Robert J. Cuddihy of The Literary Digest, Knighthood in the Order of the Legion of Honor for the services of The Literary Digest in Near East and other relief campaigns.

The presentation of the Legion of Honor Cross and the conferring of Knighthood was made on behalf of the French Government by Gaston Liebert, Consul-General of France, who performed the ceremony in the offices of The Literary Digest, and in the presence of the editors of that weekly, and all the chiefs of departments of the Funk & Wagnalls Company.

A Study of the Elementary School Courses

LIKE all other phases of the school curricula, elementary reading has come in for its share of adverse criticism on the ground that its content is too limited, that material which is over-mature in subject matter and form is often attempted, that there is a great deal of repetition which leads to a waste of time and a loss of interest, and that a more careful grading would enable pupils to get more information and more enjoyment out of their reading.

Such criticisms, together with the desire to formulate definite standards for choosing reading matter have led to an investigation by Willis L. Uhl, Associate Professor of Education in the University of Wisconsin. His report appears in a booklet in the University of Wisconsin series of Studies of the Social Sciences of History.

In carrying on the investigation, it was necessary to secure data from a large number of school systems before any definite scheme of standards could be attempted. These data indicated (1) the range of selections now in use; (2) their degree of success; (3) the reasons for their success or lack of success.

Two methods of procedure were followed: first, reactions were obtained directly from teachers and pupils upon selections read in school, and then these reactions were studied with a view to standardizing the material of the reading course.

Two questionnaires were sent out to teachers in a representative number of schools thruout the country. In the first the teachers were asked to report on the readers most used in their grades, judging the general character of the selections reported on. The second questionnaire, based largely on the results of the first consisted of titles of selections arranged in lists of about fifty for each of the eight grades with directions for judging the selections by means of a descriptive list of desirable and undesirable terms which had been used in response to questionnaire one. The care with which both questionnaires were treated added greatly to the weight of the study.

In order to get a still different kind of data, the third part of the work consisted in presenting selections to pupils in four different schools and getting their reactions to them. The selections were chosen because of their use in nearly every city responding to the two questionnaires, their variety of appeal to children and their common use in more than one grade.

As an example of the kind of answers received, this is a copy of the judgments of a girl of grade 7: (See below).

A survey of the answers to the questionnaires showed that in all grades teachers and pupils mentioned over-maturity of reading material oftener than any other undesirable quality. This term may refer to the difficulty of diction or content, to unfamiliarity with subject matter or to difficulty with symbolism.

Teachers' comments indicate that in addition to over-maturity such qualities as "no story," "lacks action," "too long," "too sad," "monotonous," "not well told," act as determining factors of undesirability.

To cite some specific examples, teachers reported that such selections as Grey's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," "The Fall of the House of Usher," "Nuremburg," and "The Czar

Selections

Comments

"Excelsior"—Dislike. Because for two reasons, first I don't understand it, second its object is not the kind I like.

"The Barefoot Boy"—Like it because it's full of fun and country life.

"Abou Ben Adhem"—Dislike it because I don't understand it.

"The Wreck of the Hesperus"—Like because it shows daring and is exciting.

"Aladdin"—Like because it's different and shows selfishness and unselfishness.

"Paul Revere's Ride"—Like because it's exciting and a good turn.

"The One-hoss Shay"—Like because it's funny and interesting.

"The Gettysburg Address"—Dislike because I've heard it so many times and it is uninteresting.

"The Chambered Nautilus"—Like because it shows beauty and describes well.

"Douglas and Randolph"—Like because it shows fighting in it and shows bravery and how certain people stick to a thing.

"Baron Münchhausen"—Like because it shows when people brag they get beaten.

"Christmas at the Cratchits"—Dislike because I've heard it so many times and is same as many other stories.

"What Constitutes a State"—Dislike because not any real object.

and the Angel" have no place in an elementary school reading course. The Münchhausen tales require careful teaching, and teachers who lack interest in humorous passages should be warned against them. The over-maturity, abstractness and sadness of Bryant's "Thanatopsis" make it undesirable for use in an elementary reading course. The poem entitled "What Constitutes a State" was unfavorably received, the criticisms indicating that the selection is too didactic and that it contains symbolism and words that are too difficult.

In the answers to the questionnaires many evidences of the outstanding qualities of superior reading selections appear. Such qualities as "interesting action and character," "adventure," "humor," "easy content," "easy diction," and "portrayal of the supernatural" and of "kindness," "faithfulness" and "loyalty" are the most frequently emphasized as essentials in first rate stories. Pupils' interest in poetry is shown by their reactions to the poems submitted to them. The first poem reported on was "Excelsior." Only a few liked it, while the majority said that they didn't like poetry anyhow. In nearly every case, however, the same pupils liked "The Village Blacksmith," "The Barefoot Boy," and "The One Hoss Shay," which only confirms the opinion of many teachers that the difficulty is nearly always with certain poems and not with poetry in general.

A survey of the data on informational literature throws light upon the lack of interest of either pupils or teachers in the traditional informational literature now available in readers and shows that if informational material is used it should be adapted to pupils' use by experts and not culled from masterpieces written for adults. New informational passages when they possess the same desirable qualities as classical non-informational literature are as popular as any reading selections.

In connection with the investigation, Professor Uhl has made a very complete list of what he terms "superior selections for all grades," which might well be studied by everyone seriously interested in the subject of elementary school reading. (We do not reprint it for lack of space.)

Summing up the points arrived at, we find that there are certain guiding principles that help in selecting reading matter and standardizing a course. First, the mastery of the mechanics of reading results from the use of interesting material and consists partly in obtaining a favorable attitude toward what is read. Second, teachers assert that ability in interpreting the printed page is facilitated by the use of interesting subject matter. And third, the development of general culture is primarily dependent upon a certain type of exercise—pleasurable activity in reading.

These considerations have led to the formulation of certain standards which aid in judging reading matter. For example, grading titles on a percentage basis, the comprehension values are: A (very easy), which denotes a comprehension score of 85 to 100 attained by the pupils; B (moderately easy), 75 to 80; C (difficult), 65 to 70; D (too difficult to be attempted), lower than 65.

The same numerical values hold for interest ratings: A (very interesting); B (moderately interesting); C (needing careful attention to secure interest); D (too uninteresting to be attempted).

The Selection of Textbooks

"THE Selection of Textbooks" by C. R. Maxwell, a volume in the Riverside Educational Monographs, published by Houghton Mifflin, is a succinct and meaty volume for anyone interested in textbooks. However, two chapters are of especial interest: the first, "The Textbook a Necessary Tool in Teaching," and the sixth, "Justifiable Standards for Selection."

In discussing the textbook as a necessary tool, Mr. Maxwell quotes a comment on American textbooks made not long ago by Dr. Winship: "There has been no improvement in great works of fiction, in great poems, or in great essays in half a century, but American schoolbooks have improved marvelously, almost miraculously. Nowhere in the world have they improved as in the United States. There is not a nation on earth in which the schoolbooks approach even faintly those of America." Mr. Maxwell then discusses the textbook as an aid in instruction—because it is a convenient means of having at hand necessary data—because it presents a definite organization of material—because it furnishes the teacher a means of selecting pertinent subject matter. An ideal social situation in school would mean, he says, that students are constantly working on problems that arise from their own activities. Few people would claim that such an ideal is possible of realization. In such a scheme the textbook would have little place. The socialization of the school, however, does not mean the elimination of a textbook. It means rather a modification of its use. Teachers frequently fail to realize the intense concentration of the material in our textbooks. Students fed exclusively on a textbook diet become as dissatisfied as boarders fed entirely on canned goods, but textbooks when rightly used furnish an excellent means for presenting problems to students. The textbook is an aid to raising problems that supplement the pupil's own experiences. The textbook indicates the trend of current educational thought. The textbook must meet both the demand of the conservative and the progressive. The textbook presents a better basis for organization than could be expected from the average teacher." That, briefly, is the outline of Mr. Maxwell's text in his first chapter.

In Chapter Six, "Justifiable Standards for Selection," Mr. Maxwell says, "An exhaustive examination of a text should be made by a competent committee before its adoption. Standards should be first applied to the content and organization of the book. A book fulfills its purpose thru its content. The main justification for a textbook will be that it meets the particular need of the user. Every textbook has or should have a specific purpose. A school system should also have in mind definite aims for accomplishment. The aim in one city might be preparation for industrial or vocational efficiency. In another community it might be the preparation for a specific industry.

"The text should be examined from the standpoint of accuracy and reliability of material. An arithmetic needs close and careful examination to see whether the author has been consistent and conventional in his arithmetical notation. The text must be free from bias and dogmatism. It is easy for an historian, for example, who has prejudice in political parties to discuss the tariff in such a way that only one half of the truth has been given. Relative values of subject matter must receive consideration. In geography we have had texts the authors of which were particularly interested in physical geography, and the books were entirely unbalanced from that point of view. In history the years in which the country engaged in war received attention much beyond their due. In arithmetic topics which were a heritage of the middle ages continued to be given the same attention as topics which were vital in the twentieth century. Physiology emphasized the structure of the human body at the expense of the necessary laws of hygiene. Textbooks in language violate the principal of selection on the basis of relative values. The purpose of language teaching is granted by most people to be the formation of right speech habits. The texts very frequently devote much more attention to principles of grammar than to fixing language habits thru use.

"One of the greatest contributions to teaching in recent years has been the scientific study of the different subjects in the school curriculum. There has been accumulated a large amount of information on the material necessary in each subject thru such studies. A textbook writer who is unfamiliar with these investigations, or, if familiar with them, gives no heed to them in the writing of a text, is placing an obstacle in the path of educational progress. Many textbooks on the market show that the author has been in no way influenced by these scientific investigations. A person selecting books needs to bear this in mind in his examination.

The committee on minimum essentials in elementary school subjects has had a great influence on the content of textbooks. Arithmetic has been a subject that has required undue attention in the past, owing to the fact that obsolete material has still encumbered the textbooks. Teachers have felt that it was necessary to teach these textbooks even tho they could see no social sanction. Topics that have been of no practical use for centuries have received just as much attention from the author of the textbook as those which are of real value. Most of our present-day writers have been influenced by investigations of the content of arithmetic, but there are still texts on the market that follow the traditional plan.

"In the subject matter of spelling, which is considered very simple from the layman's point of view, grave errors may be made if the author has not been a student of the present-day experiments in education. The change in the content of spelling is possibly as marked as in most subjects, yet there are still spelling books on the market today that show no influence whatever of the results of the modern scholarship in this field.

"The amount of material in a textbook needs to be checked carefully. Many textbooks have contained a too meager amount to be most serviceable. The development of a topic may, in many cases, be adequate, but the drill material to gain the requisite skill in fixing the form has been inadequate. The amount needed in a text will depend to a great degree upon how many different texts are used in one subject. If a school is restricted to one or two textbooks it is essential that a text containing a larger amount of material be adopted than would be the case if half a dozen texts were available on the same subject.

"The illustrations of a text should be studied carefully. One striking line of demarkation between the text of today and those of a few years ago is in the great use of illustration. A textbook may be much more useable if it contains certain helps; e. g., index, selected list of references, charts, diagrams, sketches, etc.

"The reputation of the author of a textbook has been given undue prominence in advertising the text. The reputation of publishers should be given a slight consideration. But the date of copyright should be taken into consideration. A period of rapid educational progress such as we have been passing thru means frequently that textbooks in many subjects soon become obsolete unless kept up-to-date by revision."

In considering the mechanical construction of a book, Mr. Maxwell discusses the following standards: "The first thing in the mechanical construction of a book which impresses one is its general appearance. This is made up of many factors. It may mean attractiveness of cover, the kind of type, kind and number of illustrations, size of book, number of pages, binding, quality of paper, etc. The binding of a book should be durable and attractive. The type used in printing textbooks is receiving more attention today than formerly. We have had a few scientific investigations of the size and type of length of line that is most easily read and causes the least eye strain. The size of the book needs to receive some attention, but this has been standardized to such a degree that little need be said on the subject. Textbooks on geography are about the only ones that have fluctuated in size in any degree in the last few decades."

To this discussion of the standards for selection of textbooks, Mr. Maxwell has added in Chapter Seven of his book an outline for judging all texts. The texts are to be marked in spaces reserved in the outline—excellent, good, fair, poor.

Are We Getting Better Textbooks?

IN the June 3rd issue of the Independent a symposium on American text-books was conducted based on a questionnaire sent out by Professor Franklin H. Giddings of Columbia University. Eight questions were asked some leading American educators:

What improvement, if any, has there been in the text-books used in our schools, in recent years?

What text-book, or series of text-books, would you be willing to name as a model?

Should text-books be simpler—or more elaborate? Is the price of text-books important?

What effect, if any, do you believe Wells's "Outline" and Van Loon's "Story of Mankind" have had on the teaching of history and related subjects in our schools?

Do you believe they should have an effect?

How far do you think it expedient to institute a censorship over history text-books?

What text-book or series of text-books would you suggest as the most urgently needed for schools to-day either in your department or any other?

Of the answers to these questions the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY has selected some of the answers to questions 1 and 2 and 3 as of interest to readers of its Educational Number:

David Snedden, Professor of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, answering the questionnaire, said:

"1. During recent years text-books have improved mechanically. Generally, American text-books far surpass those of other countries in paper, illustrations, and typography. Where well-defined new pedagogical tendencies of a somewhat general nature have developed, text-book producers have not been slow to respond. Thus have come some really remarkable advances in text-books for primary reading, supplementary reading, enriched geography, localized civics, and, in lesser degree, less encyclopedic texts in history.

"2. It is practically impossible to designate model text-books, except in the light of accepted statements of the educational aims to be served. Having in view their purposes and present pedagogic standards, perhaps the primary reading texts are the most advanced just now.

"3. I believe that some text-books should be simpler than they are now, and some others far more expanded. There are subjects and grades in which the text should far more completely take the place of the teacher than is now the case. In some other fields texts are now too elaborate for the purposes which they should serve.

"It is probable that America—thru provision of text-books at public expense, or even thru purchase by parents—will be willing to spend increasing amounts and increasing proportions of school expenditure on these essential tools of education, text-books."

William C. Bagley, Professor of Education, Teachers' College, Columbia University, said:

"School text-books have been greatly improved during the past thirty years, especially in the following respects:

"a. Improvement in make-up, letter-press, and illustrations,

"b. A better selection of materials made possible (1) by numerous committee reports which reflect the combined judgments of specialists in the various fields of subject matter, successful classroom teachers, students of educational theory, and school administrators, and (2) by extended investigations of the curriculum problem which have made increasing use of scientific and objective methods of determining the materials that have the largest worth and can at the same time be adapted to the immature learner.

"c. 'Market' conditions which have stimulated publishers to compete on the basis of the merit of their product rather than on the basis of the 'influence' that their agents may bring to bear upon the authorities that select school text-books. (This is not to say that dishonest or otherwise unworthy practices no longer exist. They are, however, rapidly disappearing. School boards are coming more generally to adopt text-books only on the recommendation of superintendents, and superintendents, usually either leave the initial choice to committees of classroom teachers or counsel with the teachers before making their recommendations. In the training of teachers an effort is made to develop standards for the selection of text-books, and practically every published code of professional ethics for teachers explicitly emphasizes the need of absolute fairness in dealing with this problem.)

tion in the various fields of specialized scholarship no longer think it beneath their dignity to write books for school children.

"2. A text-book that is in all respects a model probably will never be produced. Standards vary with the subject treated, the age and ability of the pupils to whom the book is addressed, and the equipment of the typical teacher who is to use the book. Individual books, too, usually have their 'high points' and their 'low points.' Beyond this a most important quality of a good text-book—namely, its accuracy—can usually be determined only by a special student of the subject. With these difficulties of a just evaluation in mind, I should hesitate to name specific text-books as 'models.' As a student of education, however, I have been impressed with the excellence of the following books: Marshall and Lyon's 'Our Economic Organization' (a text for senior high school classes); the elementary texts in geography by McMurry and Parkins, Atwood, and Brigham and McFarlane; the Horn spelling books; the Thorndike arithmetics.

"3. Careful experiment is needed to determine whether a text-book for a specific subject and a given level of instruction should present a condensed outline or a more detailed treatment. Generally speaking, I should say that simplicity, clarity, and concreteness are cardinal virtues in text-book construction."

Davis S. Muzzey, Professor of History, Barnard College, Columbia University, said:

"As the fire of the critics to-day seems to be directed against text-books in American history, I should like to direct my remarks to that subject.

"1. There has been a great improvement in the quality of our text-books in American history in recent years. The writers of the newer books, keenly alive to the responsibilities which recent advances in the study of economics, sociology, political ethics, and international relations have put upon them, have tried conscientiously to produce books which should give the student a far better introduction to the problems which he will be called upon to face presently as an active citizen than did the old manuals, which repeated over and over again the astonishing victories of our military heroes and the invariable impeccability of our statesmen and diplomats. To find space in the high school texts for the treatment of causes and results, of economic and social problems, it is necessary to omit or to treat very briefly many of the stories which have very properly edified the student in the grammar grades. Some critics who miss the familiar emphasis of their own boyhood education in American history, judge the newer books only by these omissions or abbreviations, oblivious of the patiently wrought material which opens new avenues of approach to the problems of society to-day.

"2. If I were to name a 'model' textbook among the many excellent ones that have appeared in the last twenty years, I should choose the book which has been the inspiration of the newer school of text-book writers, and which is still unsurpassed by any of its emulators: namely, Professor James Harvey Robinson's 'History of Western Europe.'

"3. The high school text in American history should be more 'elaborate' in the literal sense of the word, that is, it should 'work out' trends and tendencies, and not merely repeat the facts which the student has already learned in the lower grades. There are few questions too difficult to present to a high school student, if only the manner of presentation be clear and simple. One of the reasons, I believe, why many students find history 'dull' is that they are not led on by the text or the teacher, as they are in other disciplines, to tackle problems requiring a higher grade of intelligence than that which they had to exercise in the preceding course in the subject."

M. V. O'Shea, Professor of Education, University of Wisconsin, said:

"1. During the last fifteen or twenty years there has been marked improvement in the text-books in all subjects. The text-books now coming from the presses of the leading educational publishers are all based upon an intimate study of the way in which children learn the subjects which are treated. In general, the text-books today are much more concrete and they are far better illustrated than were the text-books of fifteen or twenty years ago. The books for the youngest pupils, especially in reading, history and literature, are works of art, besides having high value in respect to content. Our text-books are superior on the artistic side and, I think, also on the content side, to the text-books used in any other country in the world.

"2. It would be impossible to name a single text-book or a single series of text-books which stands out distinctly above all others. In every important subject taught in the schools, there are a number of text-books that are of substantially the same merit; they differ only in minor details. Certain guiding principles in every subject have determined the text-books written and published during the last ten years. There is practically no difference of opinion today in our country regarding the fundamental methods to be observed in the teaching of reading, arithmetic, spelling, geography, history, the physical and biological sciences.

"3. The authors of the text-books study very carefully the needs of the pupils for whom they write. The publishers make a careful investigation when they plan a new text-book, or series of text-books, to find out what improvements can be made. The most accurate statement would probably be that present-day text-books are well adapted to the needs of the schools. When these needs change, the books will become more simple or more elaborate as the case may demand."

James F. Hosis, Professor of English, Teachers College, Columbia University, said:

"There has been distinct improvement in text-books in recent years, with respect to both content and method. Various investigations have shown that much of the material formerly included in school text-books is of relatively little value and might well be omitted. This is strikingly true in the field of arithmetic. From the point of view of method, the greatest advance has been in making a more direct appeal to the student and arousing in him what is sometimes called the problem attitude. In a word, the books tend to be more thought-provoking and to lead the student to do something more than merely memorize the text. At present there is a hopeful tendency to apply scientific methods to the determination of how much emphasis must be placed on different topics in order to insure their mastery. Examples of this are seen in the careful arrangement of vocabulary in beginning reading books and in the arrangement of problems in arithmetic."

"The text-books most needed at the present time, in my judgment, are in the field of history. The books so far prepared seem to me to have approached the subject mainly from the point of view of what historians have found out, or what an adult might be expected to know, not what children can assimilate. Particularly do I think the gathering of a mass of facts and incidents in periods, arranged chronologically without regard to whether these incidents are closely related to each other or not, is indefensible. Few students who have been thru the text-books in common use can discuss intelligently any problem of American life in terms of the past. This is because there has been no connected presentation of the facts relating to the topic from the beginning to the present time, and no direct application made to present-day life. If we must continue to have the romance of war, it might well be gathered into library books for general reading. The young people might better devote their serious study in school to the history of industry, education, and similar social topics."

The New Education

W. G. COVE, President of the National Union of Teachers of England and Wales, spoke before the recent Convention of the N. E. A. on "The New Education."

"There can be no doubt that the school is an international factor of potent force, and it is within the power of its teachers to use it for the destruction or the healing of the nations. To us is given the honor of placing at the disposal of growing life the best of the inheritance of the past and the duty of nurturing the promise of things that are to be."

"As we look round at the effect of modern industrialism we note that one of its baleful effects has been the mechanizing of life. 'Mechanism dominates life and not life mechanism.' We have seen human personality dwarfed, stunted, and twisted into ugly shapes by the dominance of a mechanized industry and a mechanized society. Life has become, for millions of men and women, purposeless, stale, and flat. We have thought in terms of material values and not in terms of human values. It is the purpose of the school to restore to us the correct content of value. It is our task to make society see the truest economy in happy childhood, growing life, and creative play and work. I do not bemoan the fact that modern civilization is based upon machine production. I have no regrets about the application of science to the provision of man's material needs. What I do not object to is the mechanizing of human life and the material appraisal of human personality. And there is no inevitable need that this should be so, for the school, rightly conceived by society and given its proper place and function in society, is capable of performing the task of preserving and conserving the intellectual, moral, and spiritual legacies of the ages."

"The school in modern society is the social unit for the exercise and development of all that we term humanism. And there is abundant evidence that the schools of Europe and America are realizing their high mission and calling in the preservation of the human in this machine age. No longer do we regard the children as passive recipients of facts. No longer do we emphasize mere knowledge. We recognize variant individualities and unfolding personalities. We treat with reverence and wonder unfolding life. The escape for the child from a mechanized society is found in the spontaneous activities of the school. Not only is this true of our infants' and junior schools, but it is increasingly becoming true of our senior departments."

Fostering a Love of Books and Reading

What Bookmen Can Do For The Uplift of English

THE modern bookseller's shop is too often chiefly a sales-room for stationery, fountain-pens, newspapers and indifferent fiction. No doubt we shall be told that it is a case of "demand and supply." But there is reason to believe that the supply is less intelligent than the demand. This is obviously the case with many station bookstalls, where the traveler often buys trash because he can find nothing else. An educated bookseller is in a position to render a great service to the community: and we believe that the English teachers of the near future will, in turn, be glad to lend such a benefactor all the assistance in their power by encouraging their pupils to become his customers. In every town the bookseller's shop should become what in university cities and in one or two other favored spots it is already, a center of literary and artistic interest and enlightenment; a place where the best books, new and old, can be inspected at leisure."

It is in this special paragraph that the recent report of the Departmental Committee of England's Board of Education, appointed to inquire into the position of English in the educational system of England, calls the attention of booksellers to the particular service which is theirs to perform.

The whole report is interesting because it shows how closely the spoken word is linked with the written, and elaborates on it by citing in just what ways a love of good books and reading will further the development of a cultured language and people.

All who are concerned with the extension of interest in English and literature, and more particularly all who are directly connected with the production and distribution of books will find the report decidedly worth their attention.

As English literature, the report points out, takes its proper place in education, and a generation grows up accustomed to read and with the wish to possess it, the response to every enlightened attempt to bring good literature within everybody's reach should be more and more encouraging. In all this publishers, as well as booksellers, will find much that is worth their careful consideration. Publishers, the report rightly recognizes, have already rendered service by the publication of sets of English classics. "Nothing," it argues, "is more vital for the spread of good literature than the supply of good editions of standard authors at a moderate cost." The publisher who "makes good literature easily accessible in a desirable form is the best of educational missionaries."

In speaking of the potent position that reading occupies in human affairs, the report says: "All reading is experience—an indirect form of experience, but a particularly powerful one, and for many minds the most varied and fruitful in the whole of life. The ordinary human destiny consists of playing, fighting, marrying, managing a household, bringing up children, pursuing a lifelong vocation. All these are experience, but of a kind tending more towards habit than reflection. Book reading cannot replace these acts, but it can add almost infinitely to their effect upon character. If then we are to read at all—and it is now thousands of years since man neither read literature nor heard it—here can be no doubt of the importance of a choice in what we read.

"Few influences in life are so subtle or so powerful as the invisible power of literature—what may be called the undertones of the printed voice. All who understand or appreciate what is properly described as literature will acknowledge this at once: but it is true in a wider sense. Any written words, whether in books or periodicals, which are the result of a formative process in the mind of the writer, must make in their own degree a formative impression upon the mind of the reader. If the reader's mind is the stronger the impression will be slight, or very possibly negligible, but if the tablet to be impressed is soft and still undinted the mark made will be proportionately deeper and more lasting. And what is most important here is not merely the depth, but the outline or style of the impression. For an example, we may contrast the picture of human life as drawn by Tolstoy or Hardy in any of their novels with the trivial realism, equally removed from feeling and reflection, of the domestic scenes in the ephemeral novels which fill the bookshops to-day.

"It is of the first importance that the children should be encouraged to form the reading habit. A child's desire to read ought never to be frustrated for want of books. If he has once become a reader of books worth reading, there need be no further anxiety about his education. All that is necessary is to give him opportunity.

"At the present time children read more rapidly and continuously than did the children of two generations ago. The spectacle of life is thrust more violently upon them, and their curiosity is therefore more active and more various. The aspect of the world, too, changes more rapidly than of old, and fresh forms of life and activity cannot be explored to the reader's satisfaction without fresh books written expressly to deal with them. It is important that this need should be met by the provision of an ample supply of new books and new periodicals of the right kind. It is not necessary or desirable that writers, however skilled, should undertake the production of a new series of "moral tales."

The first condition of success is that we should act up to our own tastes and offer to the young nothing which is not in some degree a work of art, the sincere expression of the writer himself. All we can do here is to be constantly on the lookout for the appearance of sincere and attractive writers; and there is in fact no good reason to apprehend their extinction. To meet the demand for information, for adventures on the simplest terms, for pictures of school and boyhood, and in general for stories which reflect life but make no attempt to turn it into literature, something more may be done and is, in fact, being done."

The part which public libraries and librarians can and should take in furthering an increased interest in the love of books and reading is emphasized in a special paragraph of the report. It says in part:

"Books cannot teach the use of books, and even the provision of good books does not ensure that good use will be made of them. But a public library under enlightened management can be of immense assistance. (1) Every municipal library should seek to possess a complete collection of standard English authors, with copies of all the critical works, biographies, and books of reference needed by students of the English language and literature. (2) The juvenile section should contain a number of sets of the best novels and tales of adventure and the best books for boys' and girls' reading: useful lists have been issued by some of the local education authorities, and by other compilers. A children's reading-room, if managed by someone who really understands children's needs, is extremely useful at holiday times. "Story-telling afternoons" during the Christmas holidays, organized by one public authority, offer an example worthy of imitation. (3) The purchase of sets of plays would render possible in many localities the formation of reading societies and dramatic clubs that would foster literary interest and taste. (4) Occasional lectures on books in the library, or on the literary associations of the district, are also helpful. (5) New books should be brought to the notice of readers not merely by the publication of lists but by placing the books where they can be inspected. (6) The official librarian's besetting temptation is to become a custodian rather than a distributor of books. His first duty should be to make his library widely useful and attractive. For this he requires wide knowledge of books, sympathies with many tastes and needs, a readiness to learn and a willingness to serve."

All in all, the report is optimistic in tenor, looking forward to a not-too distant time when our literature and language will occupy a higher plane than at present. "As English literature takes its proper place in education, and a generation grows up accustomed to read it and with the wish to possess it, the response to every enlightened attempt to bring good literature within everybody's reach should be more and more encouraging."

The Film, The Book and The Book Trade*

By Georges Moreau

IN this time of rapid living, when everyone tries to prolong the course of existence by multiplicity of sensations, it can be fairly stated that if the amount of printed matter increases endlessly, we nevertheless read less than formerly. In the pages of books, magazines or newspapers, the text tends to occupy less and less space, and to give way little by little to pictures. Hardly twenty years ago illustrated books were rare in France: now they are legion. With the appearance of the moving picture, the war against the printed word continues and presses on unhaltingly, to such an extent that those movie scenarios are the best which have freed themselves entirely of explanatory notes.

Does this mean that the one will kill the other? That the film will some day supplant the book and the newspaper? We do not think so; but it does not take a great prophet to predict a brilliant future for the movies. Already, on all parts of the globe, diverse peoples have recourse simultaneously to this wonderful means of expression. Already the news films are sent daily by airplane from the principal centers of screen information, and are on all the Paris screens twenty-four hours after the event. They spread to the provinces and abroad as rapidly as the printed page, establishing a sort of unceasing communication among all the peoples of the earth. Furthermore, in spite of the constant effort of public authorities, most of the public libraries are nearly at a standstill and usually deserted.

while the movie houses increase with unbelievable rapidity, penetrating into the most remote villages where they find a numerous and devoted public. For the movie, by its very nature, has a power of attraction and expansion superior to that of the book: the film has, indeed, the great advantage over the book of speaking a concrete language which is immediately intelligible to the most ignorant, and understood by all in all countries without need of translation.

But like any medium, the movie, according to what use it made of it, may become the best or the worst of influences. From the day when it was first seen that animated images exercised an irresistible attraction over the masses, unscrupulous speculators, in search of profitable and easy successes, had no hesitation in exploiting basely this new infatuation of the public. They created for this very purpose coarse films full of the most violent actions; scenes of house-breaking and murder; human deformities, epileptic gestures, etc. By dint of outbidding for the popular favor the movies quickly became a school of depravity and ugliness. Friends of the young, justly alarmed at the pernicious influence of such spectacles, felt the need of reform. It seemed urgent to oppose this flood of bad films which appealed to the worst instincts of human beings, good films capable of developing intellects, of spreading essential truths, and awaking at the same time feeling for art and the love of beauty.

At a recent convention organized at the National Conservatory of Arts and Crafts, by the French Society, for Art in the School under the auspices of the Minister of Public Instruction and the Municipal Counsel of Paris, it was shown that the movie offered infinite resources of suggestion, demonstration and instruction, and that it was possible to found a whole new pedagogy upon cinematic processes. Ever since this enlightened beginning, the educational film has been the order of the day; educators, constructors of apparatus, publishers, all united in a common idea, have applied themselves to the problem with the result that from this active collaboration numerous films, at once instructive and recreational, are now available for school and family needs.

We find ourselves, therefore, at the opening of a new era in which we shall see educational reforms and drastic changes in publishing. The book-publisher will perforce become the film publisher, and these films will be of great variety. There will be films in black and white, colored films, films given at normal speed and the slowed down films, silent films and the films with spoken parts; lessons on all matters that can be taught by films: French language, geography, history, sciences, agriculture, technology, design, etc. In order to fulfill exactly their purpose these educational films will have to be the result of the collaboration of specialists of authority: professors, technical men and publishers. And also, to ensure the success of this new production, the active co-operation of the bookseller will be indispensable.

Every bookstore is, indeed, the intellectual center where the choicest spirits meet to exchange ideas and to keep posted on the progress of the world. Henceforth, beside the friends of the book will be found the friends of the movie, who will come regularly to inquire for the latest film. The intelligent bookseller will take the greatest pains to encourage these meetings and to satisfy the wants of the newcomers. Even as certain booksellers of yesterday were induced to organize the sale or renting of gramophones and phonographic records, so the bookseller of tomorrow will be obliged to add to his library a well-stocked film department.

Furthermore we are convinced that he will be the authorized middleman between constructors of apparatus and organizers of courses, lectures and popular shows. In order to make his films known and appreciated he will also have to provide for the satisfaction of his clients a small screen on which he can easily throw the pictures. We cannot emphasize too strongly the need for young booksellers to follow this great movement closely, and, in order not to be taken by surprise, to complete their professional education by the study of cinematographic processes.

May we not be allowed in conclusion to register the following wish: that the "Maison du Livre Français," so modern and so alive, which has been able by a bold initiative to group harmoniously all the energies of the Parisian and provincial book-trades, should enlarge its domain with as little delay as possible, and become also the "Maison du Film."* From now on, on good book and the good film mutually aiding each other, will spread rapidly in all directions and will assure the radiance of French clearness and beauty.

* Worthy of mention here is the example of collective effort given at the Movie Exposition by some Paris confères. In a stand tastefully decorated and furnished with several movie libraries and collections of films, it was gratifying to note the grouping of four publishing houses: Delagrave, Doin, Gauthier-Villars, Larousse, in close union with the celebrated firm Pathé-Consortium-Cinema. In this new type of co-operation each publisher, following his specialty, was to plan educational films and supply them with pamphlet-programmes intended to serve as commentaries; realizing thus the formula inscribed in stone over the front of the stand: The Film explained by the Book, the Book illustrated by the Film.

The British Book-Trade and The English Textbook

THE vexed question of "net" school books is again concerning the bookseller and the educational publisher, and there is likely to be a lot of "hot" argument for or against. The booksellers of the country meet in conference in London this month, and there is bound to be some straight talking on the vital matter. It looks as tho there were great need here of a frank honest examination of the question of the standardization of prices. The News Agent and Bookseller's Review has some interesting remarks on the subject in its current issue.

Another firm of publishers has withdrawn its "net" school books. The reason given is that it is losing ground in competition with other houses. It says its net books are being passed over by the school authorities in favor of non-net books, and that it cannot afford to continue under such conditions.

This statement is very likely to be correct, for there is abundant evidence that the school authorities are using pressure in every direction to enable them to show a profit on every article for school use, including books, which they handle.

Take the case of the London County Council Stores at Clerkenwell. The administrators of this establishment not only undermine the prosperity of the bookselling trade by their methods, but that of every other trade, the great object being that their officials may be able to show figures which make it appear that money has been made. The whole position in this respect is, however, wholly fallacious. Anybody can show a balance on the right side if working expenses and administration costs are omitted.

Practically the whole of the trade in the books used in elementary schools is in the hands of the Educational Committees thruout the country. That for secondary schools, however, is not yet entirely in their hands, for such schools as train for the "Locals" and examinations of that type buy their own books, and generally thru the bookseller. They are well looked after, their orders are prized, and local booksellers put up keen competition to get an order.

What the net book system has done is to give every individual bookseller the same chance in competition; but, with buying in large quantities, a new factor emerges in the person of the school contractor. If he supplies a large number of any books at net terms, he is able, out of, an inordinate profit for simply passing the book along, to make a present of a considerable part of it to the schoolmaster who says it is not fair to the school to have to engage in clerical work to charge books up to the scholars' accounts without some sort of remuneration.

It is interesting to note here, that while the public pays the same price, the profit goes to the schoolmaster instead of the bookseller. Also, be it observed, the school contractor does not discount any of the other items supplied. There is no discount allowed on school furniture, stationery, or other apparatus. These things are not priced, and consequently do not lure the purchaser, like a priced book does.

The Revival of Novel Reading

FICTION has so long been the most active section of the bookseller's business that it would seem impossible to pick out any periods such as the present and say that there has been a revival in novel reading. Yet there seem many signs that not only has there been no abatement in the public's interest in fiction after a century or more of development but that the number of people who get diversion and inspiration from novels is really increasing. This opinion was voiced in an editorial in the Dallas Times Herald, this spring:

"The unprecedented revival in novel reading and the growing sale of books in general are the outstanding features in the book world at the moment. Just why that precarious element, the fickle public, has elected to take on the more permanently printed word with an all envisioning rush, the learned doctors, including Dr. Frank Crane himself, fail to explain.

"The output of the movie world in the last few years has undoubtedly been a great impetus to good reading. Not only have a great number of literary masterpieces been shown on the screen, but what is more, certain of these have been accurately and artistically filmed, thanks to the efforts of one or two directors who have shown some genius in the method of portraying the capabilities of the movies.

"But whatever be the true cause of the increased reading of books by the American public, or whatever is the highbrow decision as to the worth of the novels and books that are somehow meeting the demands of 'what the public wants,' the fact remains that a revival of reading has swept over the country and in some localities has taken on the symptoms of a craze."

Anniversary of "The American Standard"

FIFTY years ago this fall the American committee which was to co-operate with a similar English committee in making a new translation of the Bible was appointed. This anniversary will give opportunity to grant fuller credit to these workers, whose task was long and difficult and whose recognition has been small.

Mileage Bill Passes Congress

THE Interchangeable Mileage Bill recently passed by Congress, will effect substantial savings in railroad travel, not only for traveling salesmen, but buyers in their trips to market, theatrical organizations, base-ball clubs, Government officials and others who travel to any extent.

Now the authority has been given, it is expected and hoped that immediately following the signing of the bill by President Harding, the Interstate Commerce Commission will act without delay. The traveler will not be required to carry a number of different books, inasmuch as the one form of book will be universally used and accepted.

"According to the amended bill passed by the House, and since ratified by the U. S. Senate, it is optional with the Interstate Commerce Commission to order the issuance of either mileage or scrip books; the latter, if adopted, will be sold containing a number of coupons that will either be exchangeable for transportation at the railroad ticket office or acceptable for transportation on all roads. It is expected that the books will be offered for sale at a substantial discount. Possibly a book containing $100 in scrip will be sold for $75.

By this process, whether the owner travels over one of the leading trans-continental lines or upon a short line, where there are tunnels or mountainous grades, or other railroad problems, where the rate per mile today is more than 3.6c, the actual percentage of saving will be the same.

The National Council of Traveling Salesmen's Associations, assisted by other organizations such as the National Association of Book Publishers labored persistently that this favorable legislation might be enacted.

A Direct-By-Mail Campaign

A STORY is reported of a bookseller who, in June, decided to see what direct advertising would do for him. He selected 1800 customers in good standing. To these he decided to send three pieces of advertising at an interval of ten days each, every piece carrying along the idea of books for summer. The material was illustrated, lists of books were suggested, and it was made easy to send in orders. The first folder brought in $1600 worth of business. Letters were equally careful in their preparation and appeal. A feature of the third piece was a multigraphed letter which the recipient could mail back to the bookseller, suggesting:

"It will be a distinct pleasure to send you any or all of the books listed. Don't bother to write a letter; simply check the ones you wish. Put the circular in the enclosed envelope and mail it to us. We will cheerfully send them to any address you wish." Each circular had a number which told who the recipient was. The result was a total of $4625 worth of business and the cost was a little under $200.

Printing Wage Reduction in England

BECAUSE of the gradual falling off of the cost of living in England, which has had its effect on wage scales thruout that country, the Master Printers' Federation took action to get a reduction in printing scales beginning July 1st. These demands almost brought a general strike, but reductions of some kind have become so much in order in English manufacturing fields that an agreement was finally reached. The representatives of the unions, according to the latest word from London, recommended that a reduction of the rate of wages for men in London and the provinces of five shillings should go into effect July 15th, and reductions of 2s. 6d. October 7th, 2s. 6d. on January 6th, and 2s. 6d. on July 7, 1923, that is, 12s. 6d. in all with proportionate reductions for piece workers, etc. The reductions for women total 6s. This brings the scale down to about one-third of the printing cost in this country.

Manufacturing Conditions for Fall

OCTOBER 1st is the time when many printing arrangements reach their termination, and several contracts as to shop rules and wage scales between employers and employees in the New York area will expire at that time. The contracts of the following New York Unions expire October 1st:

Printing Pressmen's Union No. 51.

Press Assistants' Union No. 23.

Job Pressman and Job Press Feeders' Union.

Paper Handlers' Union No. 1.

Paper Cutters' Union No. 19.

Bindery Women's Union No. 43.

Mailers' Union No. 6.

At the end of the year arbitration agreements with these Unions will expire and the arbitration agreement with the big Typographical Union No. 6 expires October 1st the year after.

Wage discussions are already under way, the employers asking reductions and the printers asking increases. The cost of composition and presswork is now about 100 per cent higher than it was before the war and the recent reductions in England make the wage scales in this country about three times those in London.

A SUGGESTION TO PUBLISHERS

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY,

We wish to suggest to the publishers that in sending out copies of fiction or other books they wrap copies in three or five to the package in strong kraft paper, sealed and with a label pasted thereon. This would enable the merchant to buy larger quantities at one time, place same on stock shelves having clean copies without having the trouble of wrapping them themselves. We would suggest that the labels have printed title, author, edition and publisher.

We have found the enclosed label (see below) answers a similar need but we are compelled to do the wrapping.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES T. METZLER Co.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

THE Grolier Club is having its summer exhibition of recent accessions in books and prints.

There seems to be no weakening in the demand for the first editions of modern English authors, many of whom are now living.

The Walpole Galleries continue to hold successful midsummer sales. The last was on the 20th when many fine and rare books including those on art, bibliography and Americana, were sold.

The record price of the season for an author's manuscript was paid by the Rosenbach Company for Dicken's "The Haunted Man" and "The Ghost's Bargain" which brought $16,465 at the Burdett-Coutts sale at Sotheby's in May.

The current catalog of the Caxton Book Shop of London contains many unique and interesting autograph letters, manuscripts, documents, original drawings and a few association books. Among the latter is Milton's copy of "Tacitus," London, 1642, annotated thruout in the poet's handwriting.

The current catalog of Hatchards of London contains nearly 1,800 lots, including first editions of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth English authors as well as many popular authors of to-day. This catalog bears evidence of the keen interest among book buyers in current literature.

A collection of Japanese containing more than 6,000 carefully selected specimens gathered by William S. Spaulding and his brother John T. Spaulding regarded as one of the finest in private hands, has been given by the two collectors to the Museum of Fine Arts of Boston.

Plans are being considered to celebrate the centenary of the birth of Leo Tolstoy in 1928 by the publication of a worthy edition of his writings in English. The edition will probably be published by the Oxford Press and will include considerable material that has never been translated before.

It is reported that Japanese merchants and manufacturers who made fortunes during the war are now buying Japanese prints, paintings and curios in London, Paris and New York. For many years American and European collectors searched Japan successfully for objects of art until almost all of the old works, except those in private collections and museums, had been exported. Now the Japanese, unable to find what they want at home, are sending abroad for them.

The New York Public Library has placed an extensive collection of old-fashioned dime novels on exhibition. These are mainly the Beadle books, printed by Beadle & Adams and collected thru many years of painstaking effort by Dr. Frank P. O'Brien, of this city, who has presented them to the library. Thirty-one types or series of books, pamphlets and magazines are in the exhibition. This is the largest and finest known collection in existence. It is not only interesting and amusing, but as the library experts who have arranged it state, "it is literally saturated with the pioneer spirit of America."

The provisions for a library which the late Benno Loewy proposed to establish as a memorial in Cornell University, Johns Hopkins or Leland Stanford cannot be legally carried out according to a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The opinion written by Justice Walter Lloyd Smith shows that Cornell University has not yet accepted the gift of the estate and it is possible now that the library may be sold at auction. Benno Loewy a well-known lawyer and collector of this city, was killed in an automobile accident in 1919.

The latest in postage stamps is a charity issue which has just appeared in Belgium. Tho of stipulated postal value—expressed in the design as 20 centimes—it is sold for twice that sum, 40 centimes, the extra 20 centimes indicated at the bottom as plus 20 centimes. This difference goes to the "national fund for the disabled." The stamp is exquisitely engraved by the American Bank Note Company. The design is by Antony Coute, a Belgian artist, and represents the nude, strongly physical figure of a man with a bandaged head to indicate that he was thru it all and yet has strength to stand and salute his king, whose vignette face is where the sun should be. With his left hand the man supports a sword bedecked with laurels. The engravers' contract provides for 1,000,000 stamps to be delivered before January 1, 1923. As the first in a series of its kind this stamp will be a historic one among collectors. It is expected that many will buy and preserve it who have never been interested in stamp collecting.

THE PUBLISHERS' TRADE LIST ANNUAL 1922

The most frequently used reference book in all book-stores and public libraries in the United States

"No bookseller, even the humblest, if he knows his business, can afford to be without the "Publishers' Trade-List Annual," often spoken of as "the big catalogue book," which contains the price lists of all the publishers in the country."—THE NEWSDEALER.

"The humblest dealer in the smallest town needs his "Trade-List" and its wide yearly circulation is one of the commendable results of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY having always sold it at a nominal price—a price we imagine that scarcely pays the cost of binding."—GEYERS' STATIONER.

"If the holy book was as often consulted by the public in proportion as the Trade-List is by the booksellers the cry that it is a "neglected book" would never be heard, for in every shop and in every public library this familiar "jumbo" in pebbled green is in constant daily use."

HORACE MANN READERS

A reading method that gives quick, definite and lasting results. Easy to teach. Pupils develop the power to read and think independently from the very first. The books are filled with inspiring literature. The Teacher's Manuals explain each step of each day's lesson for the first three years.

The New Primer and the New First Reader contain new material in story form. May be used as basal or supplementary readers. Teacher's editions of each. Just published.

ALEXANDER'S NEW SPELLING BOOK

"The only speller that ever made the spelling lesson interesting." Word list in accord with most scientific research. Frequent reviews, dictation exercises, dictionary drills, suggestions to teachers, Ayres' Measuring Scale, Jones' Hundred Demons.

WOODBURN AND MORAN'S HISTORIES

The Makers of America

A new fifth grade history beginning with "The Spirit of '76." In a biographical way it tells the story of our country in the making, in diction intensely dramatic. The closing chapter deals with "Four Great American Industries,"—cotton, wheat, cattle-raising, coal and iron. "Hints and Questions" and Pronouncing Lists together with an abundance of new illustrations add to the value and the attractiveness of the book.

Introduction to American History

America's European Beginnings—for 6th Grade. A boldly and simply written story of the background of American History, which reviews the world's great civilizations and emphasizes their influence upon our own age and country down to 1670. Profusely and beautifully illustrated. Pronouncing lists and teacher's helps.

Elementary American History & Government

Kept always up-to-date—for 7th and 8th Grades. American History presented from the point of view of recent world events. Authentic and impartial. Beautifully and aptly illustrated. Nationally adopted.

High School Texts

WOODBURN AND MORAN'S The Citizen and the Republic

Thoroughly revised and rewritten to include the present-day economic and political changes in our government brought about by recent legislation. Discusses present-day problems, World-War effects, community civics, Capital and Labor, the New National Budget System. Inspires patriotism.

BATES'S ENGLISH LITERATURE

Creates a real appreciation of literature. Shows how an author's work reflects his life and thought, the spirit of the age, and the ideals of the Nation. Stresses literary productions rather than authors' lives. Illustrations of unusual charm.

THOMAS, HOWE AND O'HAIR'S Composition and Rhetoric

Subordinates formal rhetoric to effective speaking and writing. Careful treatment of oral composition and theme correction; fundamentals of grammar reviewed. Contains the Harvard-Newton Scale.

MUSGROVE'S

Composition and Literature

"A wonderfully human treatment of English Composition," bringing English in touch with life by recognizing contemporary newspapers and magazines, books and interests, and the literary productions of pupils.

KNOWLTON AND HOWE'S

European History Series

A two-book series especially adapted to the new problems now confronting the schools. Gives a clear account of the progress of democratic institutions. Shows how the United States has helped to shape contemporary history.

LONGMAN'S MODERN FRENCH COURSE and FRENCH TEXTS

Longmans' Modern French Course combines very skillfully the best features of the direct and the grammar methods. Delightful French atmosphere throughout. In three parts. The teacher's editions give directions for conducting the lessons.

Longmans' French Texts are the only French texts for American schools in which each volume has a specially prepared teacher's edition with translation of exercises and additional notes.

THE BEST TEXTBOOKS

are the product of specialists and successful classroom teaching. They are the work of teachers who have initiative and are determined to raise the standards of their school.

But the knack of good textbook writing is possessed by only a few. It is a rare gift.

Some authors are trail blazers, exponents of new ideas, others are "perfectioneers," who strive to perfect methods that have been crudely worked out.

The qualities of authorship are given full consideration in our selection of manuscripts for publication. Each of our books is designed to be a distinct contribution in the field of education for elementary, high, and commercial schools.

"The publication of a full-length novel by Edith Wharton is probably the most important thing that can happen in any current year of American fiction. For there is no doubt that, soberly speaking, she is the best of living American novelists. . . . She knows, infallibly, how to tell a story. "The Age of Innocence" has had, recently, its due meed of praise. I incline to think "The Glimpses of the Moon" a much better book; it is more interesting, more memorable and closer to the heart of things. . . . A good many people have considered "Ethan Frome" Mrs. Wharton's masterpiece. Taking it all in all, I believe that—until "The Glimpses of the Moon"—it has been. . . . "The Glimpses of the Moon" is a better book than "The Age of Innocence" even than "The House of Mirth." Whether "The Glimpses of the Moon" will take the Pulitzer prize is another matter. It pays no particular tribute to America, and "The Age of Innocence," in a sense, did. . . . All the same, it is a bigger book than "The Age of Innocence" which did get the Pulitzer prize. I can think of no American novel, written within the last few years, and dealing with contemporary life, to compare with it. And not only does Mrs. Wharton write better than any one else, but she knows how to unfold a more exciting tale."—

OUT of the years of your experience you have come to know the qualifications that bring popularity to a book—they are easily recognizable, stamped across its pages as you read. Such a brand of success marks indelibly THE BREAKING POINT, Mary Roberts Rinehart's fine new novel. With tense and unusual plot, with a love story equal to "K" and a quality of drama as powerful as THE AMAZING INTERLUDE, this story has no problems—for the reader. No necessity here to rely alone upon the influence of a famous author's name; THE BREAKING POINT will satisfy the most exacting of Mrs. Rinehart's old admirers and bring new ones to set a higher sales mark than any Rinehart novel ever reached before. THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF WALTER H. PAGE

By Burton J. Hendrick

Will be published October 6th

Walter H. Page was American Ambassador from the United States to Great Britain from 1913 to 1918. His account of his Ambassadorship, consisting chiefly of intimate, revealing letters written to President Wilson, Col. Edward M. House, and friends, form the basis of this biography. In the quotations of the distinguished people that follow, it will be noticed that these letters are commended both as literature and as history.

Theodore Roosevelt describes Walter H. Page as, "The Ambassador who has represented America in London as no other Ambassador has ever represented us, with the exception of Charles Francis Adams, during the Civil War."

Col. E. M. House said, "I have never read anything that can compare with them. They are destined to become classics."

Dr. Edwin A. Alderman said, "If he shall not be adjudged the best letter writer of his generation, I shall be much mistaken."

Lawrence F. Abbott said, "Walter Page's Letters are not only delightful reading because of their literary and personal charm, and because of the authority with which they report the inner workings of American diplomacy, but they are extraordinarily impressive as a revelation of the genius for statesmanship which Page himself possessed."

J. St. Loe Strachey says in the London Spectator: "The Page Letters are perfectly wonderful. He has a greater facility for photographing moral situations in words than any other man I ever ever came across."

CERTAIN PEOPLE OF IMPORTANCE

An Epic of The American Family

For ten years Mrs. Norris has been giving us glimpses of the real power that lies beyond her apparently simple art; glimpses of the beauty and pathos of young married love, the glory of motherhood, the homely compensations of poverty.

Now she has gathered all this strength and charm upon one magnificent canvas, in a work that she herself regards as dwarfing anything else she has ever attempted. In this chronicle of real persons, with their pettiness, their selfishness, their false ideals—and also with their great loves, their passions and generosity, their joys and agonies—she places before us a veritable cross-section of life.

American life; just as it has been lived for the quarter century that most of us can remember. But the elemental and fundamental emotions and environments among which these certain unimportant persons live and breathe are peculiar to no country and no race; they are as human as the need for bread, as universal as the sunshine itself.

What Dorothy Canfield, author of "The Brimming Cup" says of

"ONE OF OURS"

—To be published Sept. 8th

It is always a golden experience for me to read one of Willa Cather's books. To read "One of Ours" was a glorious experience.

The novel gave me not only the deep satisfaction and pride which every writer feels in the ripe, sound sureness of Miss Cather's technical mastery of her medium, not only the precious joy in a flawless presentation of character, but a special deep glow of emotion, warm, rich and so personal as if the book had been written for me alone.

It is my conviction, and one it makes me very happy to hold, that to read the book will bring to an immense number of Americans the same deep glow of feeling and that innumerable American families will open their doors to the hero as one of their own, much loved, flesh-and-blood kin.

Dorothy Canfield Fisher.

The first edition of ONE OF OURS will consist only of three hundred and forty-five copies as follows: thirty-five on Imperial Japan Vellum (of which five are not for sale) numbered from 1 to 35; and three hundred and ten copies on Perusia hand made Italian paper (of which fifteen are not for sale) numbered 36 to 345. The latest book by the man who wrote
TARZAN OF THE APES

AT THE EARTH'S CORE

Edgar Rice Burroughs has startled the world with his amazing stories of the Jungle and of the planet Mars, but of all the astounding yarns he has written, AT THE EARTH'S CORE is far and away the most marvelous and fascinating.

David Innes and his inventor friend, when they sought to test the practicability of their "subterranean prospector" made an amazing discovery. The two men pierced through the Earth's crust and found, instead of a core in a highly molten and gaseous state, a world, with living, breathing, functioning humans and animals, but a world still in the Stone Age. The hairbreadth escapes of the two men, the weird monsters encountered, the touch of romance and the manner of telling make this one of Burroughs' very best.

A romance as delightful as "The Broad Highway"

Ready September 30th

PEREGRINE'S PROGRESS

By

JEFFERY FARNOL

Eleven years ago, Jeffery Farnol's entrancing romance, "The Broad Highway," was a best-seller month after month. At last Mr. Farnol has written another romance of the same period and scenes; a story of the early nineteenth century, in which Peregrine Vereker, spoiled by his aunt and stung by the scorn of his uncles, runs away to learn the world and prove his worth, and in his "progress" meets with much the same gentry as peopled the England of "The Broad Highway." Indeed, several characters of that delightful story have an active hand in Peregrine's education, particularly the Tinker, that master of wholesome philosophy. Everyone who liked "The Broad Highway" will enjoy "Peregrine's Progress" just as much. And that means it's a book of the hundred-thousand class. When you are considering the best-sellers of the fall, don't overlook this one.

English Booksellers Gather

REPORTS from England on the recent annual June conference of the Associated Booksellers have emphasized the fact that there, as here, there is a continuing tendency to bring together all the different elements that touch on book distribution. All the representative publishers were present, including the present and past presidents of the publishers' associations. Speeches at the banquet were made by John Murray, speaking as a publisher, and W. B. Maxwell, speaking as an author. It is hoped that the get-together spirit will broaden to mean a getting together of all the book-trades of the English-speaking countries for better distribution of books and for the encouragement of authorship.

Schools for Bookmen

THE French book-trade papers make the announcement that a municipal school for instruction in book arts and industries was opened on July 1st in Paris—a four years' course, tuition free, a certificate of apprenticeship given to graduates. Competitive examinations for entrance were held on that date at L'Ecole Municipale Estienne.

Such an announcement should renew attention to the need in this country of training for bookselling, which has been announced as an important part of the program for the Booksellers' Association. It is to be hoped that the resolution in this direction passed at Washington is being given serious consideration at this time, in order that announcements may be made with the opening of the fall season.

The course conducted in New York by the Booksellers' League was a decided success and should be repeated in some form. Other associations should be looking over the ground, in time to make some plans for constructive work. It is to be hoped, too, that individual bookstores in places distant from large cities will make plans for small groups of study. There is a most vital need for training if the retail book-trade is to measure up to its opportunities.

Tercentenary for 1923

IT seems likely that next year emphasis will be laid on the fact that 1923 is the three hundredth anniversary of the publication of the most important volume ever issued from an English author, the First Folio of Shakespeare, published thru the financial enterprise of a group from the London book-trade and by the loyal devotion to his memory of his fellow-actors and his friend and rival, Ben Jonson. In 1916, during the celebration of the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death, the sentiment was freely expressed that both England and the United States would find 1923 an appropriate time for paying tribute to Shakespeare when war conditions were out of the way. Such emphasis would be most appropriate in schools and colleges thruout the country, and the book-trade could find many opportunities to co-operate with the educational and literary societies in making this occasion a real event. It is expected that there will be a number of English Shakespearean scholars in New York next June, attending the conference of the British and American professors of English, and this would afford an excellent opportunity for such a celebration.

The Trade List Annual

AT the moment of closing for the inclusion of catalogs in the "Publishers' Trade List Annual" this year, the record shows there will be thirteen firms represented who were not in last year's "Annual," while six minor lists included in the 1921 volume will be missing, these publishers having failed to print their catalogs in time or being seized with a misguided fit of economy that is apt to react to their disadvantage. Booksellers can always help to secure a more complete "Annual" by protesting omissions every time one is noticed.

The total number of publishers catalogs and lists in the 1922 volume will be 301 as against 277 in last year's, a gain of 24 towards a 100% Annual.

Vice Society Loses Case

THE Court of Appeals of the State of New York handed down on July 12th a decision awarding to Raymond D. Halsey, of McDevitt-Wilson's, damages of twenty-five hundred dollars against the New York Society for the suppression of Vice. In November, 1917, the Society, thru John S. Sumner, its agent and secretary, obtained a warrant for the arrest of Halsey for selling a copy of "Mlle. de Maupin," by Gautier. Mr. Sumner said that Halsey had sold the work to him. When the case was tried in the Magistrate's Court and in the Court of Special Sessions, Halsey was acquitted. Halsey then brought a suit for damages, based on malicious prosecution, against the Society. This action was tried in April, 1919, before Justice Wagner of the Supreme Court. The decision was that Halsey had not violated the section of the penal law in question and that Sumner did not have probable cause at the time of Halsey's arrest to believe that he had committed a crime by selling "Mlle. de Maupin." The matter was submitted to the jury and a verdict was awarded in Halsey's favor. The case was appealed to the Appellate Division. The decision was reversed on the grounds that there had been an error in the previous decision in not submitting the book to the jury and leaving it for them to say whether the book violated the statute. In May, 1920, there was a retrial before Justice McAvoy of the Supreme Court, and readers of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY will remember that copies of the book were provided for the jury and the book was read in court. The jury decided that the book did not violate the penal statute and that Sumner had no probable cause to believe that it did, and damages were assessed against the Society of twenty-five hundred dollars. The Society again appealed to the Appellate Division, which affirmed the decision of the trial court. The Society then appealed to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the judgment in Halsey's favor.

Censorship to the Front

FROM a dozen different directions come news items showing the subject of censorship is coming more actively to the front. In one sense, there is no censorship in America, that is, censorship in a direct sense would be the power to prohibit publication, and there is in this country no court or person with power to prohibit publication. But there is power to suppress circulation after publication, sometimes by the national statutes which prohibit interstate traffic either by mail or express, but more often by state regulations with initiative for action taken by local groups, such as the Society for the Suppression of Vice in New York or the Watch and Ward Society in Boston. The former society has been responsible for the action of July 11th, when three books were seized from Thomas Seltzer, Inc., and the latter society is responsible for the action in Boston which took "Simon Called Peter" out of the bookstores in that city.

It was under a national law that action was brought against Stewart Kidd for the sale of Rabelais. The law in each case is the same as that used to suppress objectionable photographs or post cards or the old type medical pamphlet that was so widely circulated. Most of the cases, in fact, brought to court by the societies fall into this other field. The fact that we are not alone in our censorship difficulties is emphasized by occasional dispatches from abroad.

That the public will protest more strongly under these new actions is certain, as it will not wish to be told that it cannot be allowed to read one of the greatest classics of French literature or to have an opportunity to buy books by such recognized writers as D. H. Lawrence or Arthur Schnitzler. What is needed is not so much a new law as a new intelligence in its application, and in protests against such actions the characteristics of the law should be kept in mind. The Society for the Suppression of Vice does not usually bring books into court on its own initiative. It serves as the agent thru which complaints are registered. In the famous case of "Jurgen," for instance, a paragraph in the New York Tribune made the statement that this book was "getting away with murder" or a suggestion to that effect. A reader of the paper felt that if a columnist had that opinion, it was time that complaint was registered under the New York law and he asked Mr. John S. Sumner to take action. The book has been off the market since.

It would seem as tho in such cases the other side of the case could be stated in forceful and effective way by those interested in the general promotion of intellectual interchange and that such protests should be made systematically as they come up. It might be expected that books over whose disappearance nobody wept would find little support at such hearings.

The law as written may still have its purpose, but by some joint effort that is now bound to appear it could be turned to more accurate use. Books will continue to be published which will evoke the criticism of some, but there will also be equal and co-operative defense.

So tho Rabelais is barred, Gautier has won his case, and "Mlle. de Mappiu" by a recent decision is out of the forbidden class.

Design Registration and the Book-Trade

By Walden Fawcett

CONTACT with the book-trade at a number of different points is the promise of the project of a Design Registration law, seeking enactment by Congress. There will be no formal presentation of the issue at the Capitol until next December, but the delay is not due so much to the desire to reconcile all interests that might be affected as to realization of the futility of seeking attention by the national legislature at this session. The Chairman of the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives indicated to the writer recently that his committee would make no effort at this session to give consideration to the Copyright Bill and other proposals that have long been awaiting report and recommendation. But at the next session the stage should be set for legislation of various kinds looking to the protection of industrial property, the more so because the American Bar Association is expected to adopt, at its meeting in August, a program for a complete revision of the nation's trade-mark laws.

A Design Registration System

In a nutshell, the impending project seeks to obtain protection, equivalent to the existing protection of the copyright, for any design, new and original, as embodied in or applied to any manufactured product of an art or trade. A design registration system would supplant or supplement the present design patent system which has been found faulty, by designers and producers alike and which no less an authority than a U. S. Commissioner of Patents has confessed to be inadequate to the needs of the period. More than all else, the provision of the contemplated facilities for establishing copyright by registration of design should put an end to that confusion of jurisdiction as between the Copyright Office, Library of Congress and the U. S. Patent Office which has annoyed the booktrade.

The present plan which seeks sanction from Congress for the Federal registration of designs is not, strictly speaking, a new enterprise but the revival of an agitation inaugurated some years ago. Extending back a decade or more, there has been pressure for means of Federal certification that would better meet the needs of a large proportion of the users of original designs. Various bills were, at one time or another, introduced in Congress culminating in a bill, introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Charles B. Smith, on February 19, 1918, that was supposed to represent the composite judgment of all the groups of proponents. But the legislative necessities, incident to American participation in the world war, submerged all constructive measures of this kind and it is only just now that resurrection has been deemed practicable. Members of the Design Registration League that sponsored the former bill will form the nucleus of a new promotive organization. Additional support is being mustered rapidly because of the present exacting administrative policy at the U. S. Patent Office whereby artistic merit of a high order is demanded as the prerequisite of a design patent.

Connection With the Book-Trade

Before making inventory of the "improvements" which a design registration system would be supposed to muster, over and above the present inelastic patent and copyright arrangements, it may be well to bear witness to the close contact of the new utility with the book-trade. Specifically mentioned as classes of design subjects, eligible to protection via registration, are type faces, electrotypes, borders, ornaments, dies, and cuts of all kinds intended for printing, lithographing or other use in the graphic arts; surface designs, certain classes of cover and edge designs for books; pictorial and advertising designs and forms, including all the classes of commercial prints, lithographs, etc., not registrable under the Copyright Act.

Book tradesmen who are sympathetic to the highest order of artistry and originality in typography will, perhaps, be converted to the need for better protection of designs by the situation which exists with respect to type faces, etc. In test cases, changes in a font of type have been held not to have involved invention in view of what was old in the art. Type designers have stated, in communications to Washington, that they cannot afford to do what they would like to do—have their own designs cut and cast to be placed at the disposal of the publishing world because bitter experience has proved that such a venture is rendered disastrous because of the unscrupulous type founders who promptly purchase any worthy innovation and reproduce it by electrotyping, making only such changes as will suffice for a defense based on technicalities.

Comforting surely to the book-trade would be any legislation calculated to define more sharply than at present the dividing line between copyright protection and design protection. As matters now stand, some articles, for example, certain classes of paintings or pictures employed by book publishers, may be the subject of protection under either the copyright laws or the design laws. Whether they should be entered under the former or the latter depends upon circumstances and the book-trade is thus left without hard and fast rules. In some instances interests in the publishing field have made effort to obtain protection under both laws. A Federal judge, deciding one such case, remarked that not many paintings are suitable for use as designs whereas only a few designs possess the qualities demanded by the fine art. But the example before him proved that here and there is an oil or water color that is alike serviceable in both the fine and the useful arts. Given such versatility the owner of the picture must, this Court held, decide to which region of intellectual effort the work is to be assigned and content himself with one form of protection. The method of procedure, the term of protection, and the penalties for infringement, are so different that an applicant cannot well claim dual shelter as the law now stands.

From the book-trade standpoint one of the boons of design registration would consist in the promptness with which there would be proclamation to the world of property rights in designs. The plan is to allow the creator or owner of a new design to give it active expression in art or industry as soon as it has been evolved, if desirable, safeguarding his rights by display on each production of notice that application for registration is on file. The process, it will be observed, would correspond in effect to the current copyright practice whereby copyright is established by publication, the details of application, entry, and issuance of certificate being subsequent to the initial publication.

Present Tedious Methods

The logical plan of placing the public "on notice" as to design ownership from the moment of disclosure would be in sharp contrast to the present design patent system. Bad luck and bad management have combined to render disastrously tedious the progress of the average application for a patent on design. Lately the delays have increased owing to the inadequate facilities of an undermanned and overworked Patent Office. But the routine of examination and administration has, at best, been sufficient to try the temper of the applicant who waits for Uncle Sam's sanction before offering a new design in the open market. The consequence of the delays, dragging into months, has been that many a design has lost its timeliness, appropriateness or peculiar appeal while the impatient owner waited word from Washington. Equally serious, in some lines of business, new designs that were given a supposedly confidential "advance showing" have been pirated unmercifully and their exclusive value destroyed ere the originator could obtain his design patent.

Second of the gains contemplated from a design registration system is a saving of expense for interests, such as those in the publication field, that might desire to protect considerable numbers of designs. Under the present patent system the minimum expense for a design patent, allowing for the official fee, the attorney's fee, etc., is about $30. The tentative plan for a registration system calls for the issuance of a certificate for a term of three years for a fee of $1. This might of itself accord ample protection for cover designs for current literature or subjects of transient popularity. But if, within the term of a three year license, a design proved its permanent worth or perennial value the short term certificate could be extended to a term of ten years for $10 or twenty years for $30. The latter would, supposedly, suffice for all the needs, say, of the house issuing books in series or uniform sets with prospective extensions.

Blanket Protection For a Series

Most radical of all the concessions courted by the forthcoming bill is that which would make it possible to register by a single application, for a single fee, a series of designs, numbering not less than ten nor more than one hundred where all designs in the series relate to the same class of product. The neglect of such blanket protection would be to enable the discoverer of a basic idea for decorative or ornamental design, to protect sweepingly and at modest expense all the variations of the motif or all the versions of the artistic theme. Inasmuch as designs included in a series registered for a period of one year might be registered separately later for the remainder of a long term, it follows that this arrangement amounts to a broad option during a popular try-out of selective designs, enabling the owner to confirm his monopoly on those for which the public showed preference.

Whatever the details of its provisions, a design registration law would not be expected either to abridge or extend the protection which book tradesmen enjoy under the U. S. trademark statutes. Here is a medium of good will capitalization that is distinct alike from the copyright and from the design patent. Thanks to the fact that it constitutes a monopoly that endures as long as the business it symbolizes, a registered trade-mark may prove, for the book tradesman, a very valuable asset. But the "Pollyanna" episode and other precedents have revealed to the book-trade how circumscribed is the function of a trade-mark as a badge of origin or ownership of a book as a physical thing without reference to contents.

Book tradesmen need not, however, as some have supposed, wait for a design registration law in order to authenticate the pictorial designs or symbols which find their principal use on stationery, etc. No book tradesman can register a trade-mark solely as a design for his own letterhead. If the book man is also a manufacturer or dealer in stationery he may take title to an exclusive emblem for use on the stationery in which he trades. But a trade-mark cannot justify its existence to the Federal censors solely as a commercial coat-of-arms for use on personal or corporate stationery, altho, contradictory as it may appear, no objection is offered to registering a trade-mark for a house organ or for book catalogs or lists if issued periodically or at intervals. The book tradesman, once he has qualified, however, for trade-mark ownership is free to print his mark on his letter-head. This is well indicated by the practice of Charles R. Brockmann, bookseller, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Brockmann recently obtained registration at Washington, as a mark for books, of a design consisting of the name "Brockmann's" distinctively displayed, and a representation of a shelf of eleven books supported by consoles, each ornamented with the figure of a Greek scholar. Altho Mr. Brockmann qualified for ownership by showing use of this mark on books (or book containers) passing in interstate commerce he, incidentally, features the mark on his business stationery. Booksellers, as a rule have no difficulty in proving that participation in interstate commerce which is a stumbling block to many retailers in other lines. It is an unusual bookstore that does not do sufficient business by mail to warrant Federal recognition of its trade-mark.

The West Wins the Big Game

The Bookmen's Fifteenth Annual Field Day in Chicago

WHEN the clouds, which early in the morning had threatened to dampen the entire day, had rolled by, others—much darker—gathered about the camp of the Eastern baseball team. Then—the deluge! Tho it came in the very first inning, the game was nevertheless the most hotly contested of any in recent years. The score, if not the result, was in doubt until the very last inning. And the loyal rooters from the East—both of them—never gave up. It was their vociferous cheering that spurred the warriors from the Atlantic Coast to register all of their four (4) runs.

In justice to the East, the terrific handicap under which the delegation labored, must be pointed out. The West won the game only because a combination of most unfortunate circumstances prevented the East from putting its best team in the field. First, on account of the rain early in the morning and, finally, because the St. Louis Cardinals had crept up to within a game and a half of the lead, the New York Giants, who had come to Chicago to be there on that day, were obliged to conserve their energies for the afternoon contest with the Chicago Cubs and therefore could not make the trip in the morning to the Calumet Country Club. If Field Day had not been so late this year, this might have been a different story. There are a number of other reasons why the Western team won, but chief among them is that after Youngman, the first man up, flied out to Alec McKay in left field, Hamer, Hallberg, Kohr, Drake, Bassing, Dexter, Black, Greenwood, Youngman, etc. etc., combined a cluster of singles, doubles and a triple with two or three walks for an initial total of seven runs. The 'big guns' of the East replied thunderously, and Leigh Reilly marked two for them in their half of the second. But the West's ammunition was not yet exhausted. The Windy City delegation continued its bombardment and chalked up five runs more in the second, three in the third and another in the fourth, while the East got one in the fourth and one in the fifth. That is why the final score was as it is listed below:

The Afternoon Activities

However, the results of the other contests were different. The East captured four of the six golf prizes: First in the Blind Bogey went to Ed. Ketcham (New York) and second cup to Tom Claggett (Philadelphia). Murkland (Chicago) got the first cup in the approaching and putting contest with a noble four on two balls, while Harry Burt (New York) took second. In putting, Judson Morris (Chicago) was first with a "perfect thirty-six" for the eighteen and 'Roch' Drake (New York) came in from his afternoon's round on the course in time to capture second place.

In the various races, sprints for both fat and lean, the West seemed to predominate. Thus, Hamer, Howard, Kohr, and Greenwood won for the West in these individual events and the East took first in only one, the "all fours" race. The West also captured the Relay Race and the Tug of War.

Fred Krauss (East) and Frank Reilly (West) divided the honors in the pinochle contest, and George Lea (West) successfully serenaded the eggs of the Famous Fatuliva—the strange bird recently discovered by the w. k. Dr. Traprock—into rolling up for him the gigantic sum of nearly two hundred and eighty thousand stage dollars, thereby getting first prize in the betting contest.

The Indoor-Outdoor Baseball game was confined, as usual, to Sam Darst and John Stanton, both of Chicago. It was so surprising to have one of them admit that the other fellow won that as a reward for such unprecedented fairness, the name of the defeated captain will not be given. Sam Darst's team lost—guess who won? The score when we saw it was in the thousands.

Other results were as follows:

- Betting Contest, won by George Lea.
- Pinochle Contest, won by: 1st, Fred Krauss; 2nd, Frank Reilly.
- 100 Yard Dash, won by J. G. Hamer.
- Fat Men's Race, won by F. H. Howard.

- All Fours Race, won by L. C. Greene.
- Sack Race, won by F. Greenwood.
- Relay Race, won by The West.
- Tug of War, won by The West.
- Golf Approaching and Putting, won by: 1st, P. A. Murkland; 2nd, H. P. Burt.
- Golf Putting, won by: 1st, Judson Morris; 2nd, H. Rochester Drake.

The banquet at which 'Chief' Fred Nunan presided furnished the surprise of the day. From somewhere there emerged a distinguished member of the American Booksellers' Association, no less a personage than the v. w. k. and intrepid Walter V. McKee of Detroit-on-the-Erie. And Walter certainly 'put it over.'—The Next Booksellers' Convention, of course! DETROIT, May 7-10, 1923. Everybody come!

It certainly was a live move of the convention committee to send an Ambassador to Field Day, and Walter certainly succeeded in enlisting the co-operation of every traveling man present. All of them signed on the dotted line under:

F. O. B. DETROIT 1923
AMERICAN BOOKSELLERS' CONVENTION
WAY POSSIBLE AND BE PRES-ENT MYSELF.
(Signed) Address
LET'S GO!

Already he "tentative" program of the convention as outlined by Walter McKee is so long that lack of space will not permit us to reproduce it. But it is a most attractive one and bids fair even to eclipse the very popular Washington meeting. Walter McKee will be glad, however, to send a copy of the program to any who will write for it.

Field Day would hardly be all that it is without the famous lyricist, J. J. Mullen. Witness the following from his mighty pen, which was sung to the tune of 'The Sheik of Araby':

Chorus

- The Sheik of Harry B.
- And sold by "Fritz" and "Thee."
- At night when you're asleep,
- Into your town they'll creep.
- The stars up in the skies
- Have nothing on these Guys.
- They praise it up to G.
- The Sheik of Harry B.

And we got $5.50 worth of good singing for nothing from George Lea, who out-McCormacked McCormack in "Silver Threads Among the Gold!"

Thanks For a Great Day

And last, tho hardly least, too much thanks cannot be given to the Committee, whose tireless efforts have made every Field Day a great success, and thus, the fifteenth, the most successful of all. Thanks are particularly due Brent Vaughan and Ed. Brewster, who gave up so much of their very valuable time to attend to the many details which this occasion necessitated; and to "Billy" Barse, who, tho not able to be present in person, so ably assisted the Chicago committee in the work. It was he who originated the betting contest—one in which everybody took part and which proved so popular an innovation.

Field Day Notes

A motion was made to extend Field Day to Field Week.

Second the motion! Let's have one more "week" in the book business.

Ed. Hyke and George Klages, of St. Louis, and Frank Clough, of Kansas City, graced the occasion, which left Dave Koeller and Pete Sefranka "among those missing."

We apologize to Leigh Reilly right now if we got the score all wrong. We did not mean to cheat in our favor.

If only Jack Hopkins had played first base for the East! It could have been arranged to have George Amis play the ground balls for him and he would only have had to dash off, we mean pick off, the high-balls.

Brent Vaughan did all the "shootin'." What's all the shootin' for, Brent?

Guy Holt's other names are Al Jolson and Eddie Cantor. Next year we'll have a Shubert scout look you over, Guy.

Have You Named Your Bookshop?

Names Suggest the Particular Atmosphere and Help Identify the Bookstore

THE development in recent years of the small personal bookshop and the bookshop that caters to special interests has been accompanied by one special identifying mark which is performing a good-will building service of interest and importance.

These small bookshops are named. The naming of the bookshop has been accompanied by a corresponding publicity effort in display advertising, in business forms, in imprint literature and in store signs that serves sales building by identifying a given store, and suggesting its peculiar atmosphere.

In the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY issue of June 3rd were displayed store signs, insignia and trademarks that are the advertising devices often coupled with store names. In this way the bookseller "drives home" the individuality and character of his shop. Sign boards, stationery, imprint and display advertising carry this individuality to the public, and by repetition build a place in the community for the shop.

Many booksellers are seeking this personal touch and store-identity note in their relations to their customers and prospects. New people proposing to establish shops are interested in shop names. The following list is appended giving special names of shops that have come to our attention during the past few years. They will suggest names to others interested in this method of securing a "personal" touch in book merchandising:

Who Are America's Literary Stars?

"WHOM would you name offhand as the five leading American literary stars that have risen above the horizon in the past ten years?" That was the query sent out recently by the Literary Digest to fifty-six editors, columnists, literary critics, reviewers, literary advisors of publishing houses. The whole question came up because a London editor wanted to know who were the leading figures in the American literary field coming to the front in the past ten years. The number of choices asked by the Literary Digest was five. Those chosen by a majority vote were Joseph Hergesheimer, with 22 votes; Eugene O'Neill, with 14 votes; Sherwood Anderson, with 13 votes; Willa Sibert Cather, 12 votes. Robert Frost and James Branch Cabell divided the fifth place with 8 votes each.

Altho only the first five literary stars were to be featured by the Digest, the balance of the vote has been announced. Seven votes were cast for Edgar Lee Masters; 6 for Sinclair Lewis and Edna St. Vincent Millay; 3 authors received 5 votes each: Carl Sandburg, Hendrik Van Loon and Edwin Arlington Robinson. F. Scott Fitzgerald and Amy Lowell received 4 votes each, and Don Marquis and John Dos Passos each received three votes. Mary S. Watts, Dorothy Canfield, Vachel Lindsay, Sara Teasdale, Ernest Poole, H. L. Mencken and Heywood Broun each received 2 votes. Those who received a single vote were Zona Gale, Waldo Frank, T. S. Eliot, E. E. Cummings, Donn Byrne, Melville Davison Post, Edna Ferber, Randolph Bourne, Conrad Aiken, Ben Ames Williams, James Oliver Curwood, Fannie Hurst, Peter B. Kyne, Hugh Wiley, Dorothy Parker, Ring Lardner, Thomas Beer, George Santayana, Wilbur Daniel Steele, R. C. Holliday, Edward Bok, Ben Hecht, Maxwell Bodenheim, William Ellery Leonard, Ruth Suckow and Christopher Morley.

Another interesting feature of the article in the Digest is that it gives some of the votes of individual editors and critics.

E. F. Edgett of the Boston Transcript voted for Masters, Frost, Hergesheimer, Ferber and O'Neill as representative of the American spirit in the novel, short story, play and poetry.

Henry Seidel Canby of the New York Evening Post voted for 7 instead of 5 names and said that he would be put to it to eliminate any two of these in favor of the rest, and they were Robert Frost, Vachel Lindsay, Edgar Lee Masters, Joseph Hergesheimer, James Branch Cabell, Amy Lowell and Willa Cather.

Arthur T. Vance of the Pictorial Review voted for Wilbur Daniel Steele, Joseph Hergesheimer, James Branch Cabell, Sherwood Anderson and Willa Sibert Cather.

Arthur Bartlett Maurice of the New York Herald named Masters, Sinclair Lewis, Don Marquis, Hergesheimer and Ernest Poole.

George Jean Nathan nominated Willa Cather, Joseph Hergesheimer, Sherwood Anderson, Eugene O'Neill and Ruth Suckow.

Carl Van Doren of the Nation, author of "Contemporary American Novelists," named Sherwood Anderson, Robert Frost, Joseph Hergesheimer, Edna St. Vincent Millay and Carl Sandburg.

Gilbert Seldes of the Dial named Sinclair Lewis, Joseph Hergesheimer, James Branch Cabell, Willa Cather, Eugene O'Neill, Waldo Frank, Maxwell Bodenheim and John Dos Passos.

The list of John Farrar of the Bookman was Eugene O'Neill, Joseph Hergesheimer, Willa Cather, Carl Sandburg and John Dos Passos.

John Peale Bishop, late of Vanity Fair, gave T. S. Eliot, James Branch Cabell, Sherwood Anderson, Eugene O'Neill, John Dos Passos, E. E. Cumming.

H. L. Mencken gave Cabell, Willa Cather, Eugene O'Neill, Sherwood Anderson and Hergesheimer.

Mr. Latham of Macmillan named Robinson, Masters, Poole, Mary S. Watts and Sara Teasdale.

Mr. Howland of Bobbs-Merrill named Masters, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Sherwood Anderson, Edward Bok, F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Alfred P. McIntyre of Little, Brown voted for Hergesheimer, Anderson, O'Neill, Van Loon, and concluded: "It is difficult to choose among the poets between Robert Frost, E. A. Robinson and Sara Teasdale."

George H. Doran Company names Eugene O'Neill, Willa Cather, John Dos Passos, Joseph Hergesheimer and Robert Frost.

Harcourt, Brace & Company names Sinclair Lewis, Robert Frost, Carl Sandburg, H. W. Van Loon and Willa Cather.

Thomas Seltzer, Inc., voted for Edna St. Vincent Millay, Sherwood Anderson, E. A. Robinson, Robert Frost, Amy Lowell.

Horace Liveright named as the five stars. Eugene O'Neill, Sherwood Anderson, H. W. Van Loon, Waldo Frank, Carl Sandburg and Zona Gale. "I see," he writes, "that I put six in this list instead of five but it would be impossible for me to leave any of these out." At the end of his letter he says: "I am shocked to find that I omitted the mention of Sinclair Lewis."

Numerous other critics, including many of the well-known columnists, are quoted in the Literary Digest forum, and all the comments on why the voters so voted, which space does not allow us to give here, are very interesting.

The Tourist Trade in Duluth

By Ida Josephine Watson

THE tourists' season in Duluth presents to our Book Shop a golden opportunity for the sale of intriguing books of romance and travel. That we "The Zenith City of the Unsalted Seas" hold the strategic position at the head of the most popular and beautiful water route in the country gives us faith in building up a tourists' book business. The tourists' season begins the middle of June and from that time until September, nineteen, passenger steamers arrive in Duluth from Eastern or Canadian ports almost every day. Many of the steamers anchor at the Northern Pacific docks, and remain long enough in the city for travelers to visit the shops and see some of the beautiful spots of Duluth.

The Book Shop applied to the superintendent of the Northern Pacific docks for space to erect a large sign directing tourists to the Shop and containing some alluring suggestion about books being the climax of enjoyment on a lake trip. We couldn't get permission to erect such a sign, however, at any price. The Chamber of Commerce, formerly the Commercial Club of Duluth, maintains an information booth on one of the most prominent street corners of the downtown district. We have a sign advertising the Book Shop hanging outside this booth, and we keep the information man provided with folders advertising The Book Shop and the Glass Block Store.

Our Book Shop is located on the third floor in the Glass Block Store, and many of the tourists visit the shop; but, fearing we will miss one or two, we have opened a stand on the main floor where we hope to catch 'em all. Here we carry recent copyright and reprint fiction, with the popular biographies and books of travel. A large sign directs tourists to the Book Shop on the third floor. On the basement floor of the Glass Block is "The Downstairs Store," where toys, china and glassware, etc., are carried and where there is a postal station. Opposite this station we have a branch book shop established a year ago, where we sell chiefly children's books and reprints. During the holiday season this one counter shop sold over a hundred dollars' worth of books a day. Its location opposite the post-office makes it a particularly favorable place for tourists who are mailing cards or letters, to "take along a book."

The posters from the Year Round Bookselling Committee are prominently posted on all our book stands, and contribute materially to their appearance and to the selling of more books.

Selling Books to Fishermen

By Frank Shay

SELLING books to fishermen is no easy task. Nor is selling books to the natives of Barnstable County, Mass. (Cape Cod) any easier. One needs the blarney of an Irish Romeo and the spiel of a patent-medicine hawker.

car stopped even with mine, and the driver asked for a copy of "Three Soldiers" just as if the book wagon had always been a regular time-worn feature.

One man refused to buy "Crome Yellow" because crome was spelled without the h.

FRANK SHAY VISITS TED ROBINSON AT HIS SUMMER BOOKSHOP ON CAPE COD

A young man wrote that he would like to operate the book wagon for me. I replied that he had a faculty for picking out nice soft jobs, but this particular berth was reserved for the boss.

Truly, the first month of our effort on Cape Cod was no great success. To sell a book you must first catch your man, find out whether he fishes, deals in antiques, farms, or takes in summer boarders, and then convince him you have just the book that will enable him to increase his income. For no other reason will he part with his cash.

On a particularly rotten grade at Truro, my car stalled. I managed to get her over to one side of the road and stand by until she got her wind back. A Ford sedan, operated by a young woman, started up-grade on low. I wondered if she could make it. She did. But, just as her car reached the crest it stopped and started to slide back down the hill. I made ready to help her in any way I could. Her

Another man whom I convinced in the matter of buying books (he bought over twenty dollars worth of books on Cape Cod history) told me he would be dinged if he could see how these writing fellows could spend two weeks on the Cape and learn more about it than a native whose great-grandfather had been born in the same house as he, the native, had lived in for years.

Ted Robinson, of Cleveland, has opened a bookshop here and we both make many sales that would otherwise be lost by exchanging stock.

Summer visitors begin coming next week and I look forward to a keener appreciation of books. From what I know of summer hotels, guests spend two-thirds of their leisure stifling yawns and the balance cursing the lack of reading matter. To them the "Parnassus on Wheels" should be a welcome diversion and to me a profitable pastime.

A Good House Publicity

A LITTLE pamphlet entitled "Bible Information For Salespeople," published by Holman, presents an interesting example of good house publicity, and, because of the decided effectiveness of its manufacture, is a good specimen of current printing. A Bible house, unlike the publisher of current books, does not have news in the form of new titles, and its chief educational efforts to the retail salesman must be in keeping them fully informed as to the sales points of the different Bible lines. Salesmen change frequently in many stores, and it is important for each new clerk to know just what the terms mean—"divinity circuit," "red under gold," and various styles of binding, as well as to understand the difference between teachers' Bibles, children's Bibles, old folks' Bibles.

A Radical Change Suggested

THE tremendous development of summer schools has had an important effect on the demand for textbooks and has brought new problems and opportunities into the stores that supply books in this field. Some of the registrations at these summer schools in such universities as Columbia, California and Chicago run far into the thousands.

If the suggestion advocated by the Institute for Public Service after its survey of four hundred colleges were put into effect, there would be still further change in the schoolbook year and the demands made. This association believes that the college year should be, like the business year, for twelve months. The Institute believes that the short year is one reason why the public underpays its teachers and that students would be better off for having less vacation. This suggestion does not take into account the summer school which keeps the same teachers busy on under-graduate work.

Best Sellers in June

For the first time this year "If Winter Comes" has lost first place among fiction best sellers. Its successor is Booth Tarkington's "Gentle Julia." It is possible that the award last year of the Pulitzer prize to Tarkington for "Alice Adams," the second Tarkington novel to win this award, may have helped to stimulate the sale for this new book. However, Tarkington's popularity is so strong that the award may have made slight difference. "The Vehement Flame" by Margaret Deland is an example of a novel which has risen close to the top of the best selling list soon after publication. The unusually vivid title has something to do with this. Mrs. Deland has such a large following, too, that her novels are always sure of success. The popularity of "Maria Chapdelaine" is interesting since the author has been dead several years. The book has won a great deal of attention, tho its fame was slow. "The Sheik," altho it was published last February still holds a place in the best selling list.

"The Story of Mankind" has now won first place among the non-fiction titles, displacing Wells "Outline of History," which has held that place for months. This was the book which was awarded the John Newberry Medal at the recent library convention in Detroit. "Diet and Health," which is the third on the non-fiction list, has an interesting sales record since it has recently crept up into prominence but was published back in 1918. The booksellers are all aware of the perennial interest in health books and remember the popularity of "Eat and Grow Thin." Another health book has fourth place on the best seller list, "Outwitting Our Nerves," published by Century Company. Anyone familiar with best selling lists has become used to seeing one of the "Mirror" books, this time "Painted Windows," and Edward Bok's "Autobiography" on the best selling list. It is unusual to see a book like "The Outline of Science" among the best sellers, since it is a four-volume set.

The Greatest Six Men in History

QUITE an amusing game can be worked up by saying to your friends, "H. G. Wells has picked out the greatest six men in history. The list is published in the July number of the American Magazine. A simple prize will be awarded to the one who can guess four out of six of the names he has chosen." No great amount of money need be invested in the prize, as the winning of it is quite unlikely. Mr. Wells names Jesus, Buddha, Aristotle, Asoka, Roger Bacon and Abraham Lincoln.

In explaining his choices Mr. Wells said, "Jesus of Nazareth is easily the dominant figure in history. He left no impress on the historical records of His time, yet more than nineteen hundred years later a historian like myself who doesn't even call himself a Christian finds the picture centering irresistibly around the life and character of this simple, lovable man. The permanent place of power which He occupies is by virtue of the new and simple and profound doctrine which He brought—the universal, loving Fatherhood of God and the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven. It is one of the most revolutionary doctrines that has ever stirred and changed human thought."

Of Buddha Mr. Wells writes, "He, too, brought a message universal in its character. It knows no limitations of time or of place. Many of the best and most modern ideas are in closest harmony with it. All the miseries and discontents of life are due to insatiable selfishness, he taught. Selfishness takes three principal forms: sensuousness, craving for personal immortality, and the desire for prosperity."

"Aristotle began a great new thing in the world. Before his time men had asked questions about themselves and their world, but he set them to classifying and analyzing the information which their questions brought forth. He gave the world a taste of the scientific method and the world never wholly forgot it. Again and again men kept turning back to the great clear penetrating intelligence that had set the example. Plato had said, 'Let us take hold of life and remodel it,' Aristotle said, 'First of all, let us get the facts.'"

Mr. Wells dismisses Alexander the Great, Caesar, Napoleon and Charlemagne, "the magnificent barbarians." He includes "a monarch who ruled a vast empire which stretched from Afghanistan to Madras, the only military monarch on record who abandoned warfare after victory, Asoka. After a successful war, his one and only war, he announced that he would henceforth turn from battle and devote himself to the happiness of his people. He organized the digging of wells and the planting of trees for shade. He appointed officers to supervise charitable works. He planted gardens for growing medicinal herbs and provided for the education of women. For twenty-eight years he worked sanely and unselfishly for the needs of men."

"Roger Bacon voiced a passionate insistence in the need for experiment and of collecting knowledge. He set men to thinking along new fresh lines and left an influence that has lived for the benefit of all generations."

"I think we are safe," says Mr. Wells, "in including Abraham Lincoln in our list of permanently great figures, not merely because of his own greatness but because of the greatness of the spirit of America which he better than any other American embodies."

A Week's Gleanings of Book-Trade News

"CAPTAIN BLOOD," the new historical romance by Rafael Sabatini, which Houghton Mifflin will publish August 17th, has a frontispiece by N. C. Wyeth.

BRENTANO'S will soon publish in book form "From Morn To Midnight" which is the most recent Theatre Guild production in New York.

JULY 28 is the date set by Stokes for the publication of Frances Hodgson Burnett's "Robin" which continues the story of the "Head of the House of Coombe."

A NEW REPRINT of the standard text of Adam Smith's "The Wealth of Nations" in the Bohn Standard Library has just been issued by Harcourt, Brace and Company.

EDWARD ANTHONY, author of "Merry-Go-Roundelays," a volume of humorous verse published by The Century Co. last autumn, and who has been conducting the "Book Factory" in the Sunday New York Herald, assumed the duties of "colymist" in the New York Sun, succeeding Don Marquis. Mr. Anthony calls his column "The Notion Counter."

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE have acquired from Harper and Brothers the rights to Don Marquis's first book of poems, "Dreams and Dust," which will now appear on their lists with Marquis's other books, "Poems and Portraits," "The Old Soak and Hail and Farewell," and "Sonnets to a Red Haired Lady and Famous Love Affairs."

A 9 x 12 inch pamphlet has been issued by Dodd-Mead outlining the "drive" planned for the new Locke Novel, "The Tale of Triona." The novel will be published September 23, but already the keynote of the publicity plan has been sounded in the slogan "This is a Locke Year." A map of the United States shows how the country is covered by newspaper advertising and a list of newspapers to be used in the campaign. "Particular attention has been given to those newspapers which have large circulations outside of the cities in which they are published, so that by a judicious selection of newspapers, every section of the country will be covered."

MANUFACTURING DIFFICULTIES have delayed the publication of "Later Poems," by Bliss Carman, which was announced for spring, until late August, Small, Maynard announces.

THE Business Bulletin issued in July by the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation gives the details of the large advertising campaign planned for James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Country Beyond" to be published August 1. The Bulletin announces also Peter B. Kyne's new novel, "Cappy Ricks Retires" for publication September 1.

"THE BEST BRITISH Short Stories of 1922" will be published this fall by Small, Maynard. This new addition to the short story publications of this house will be edited by Edward J. O'Brien, editor of "The Best Short Stories," and John Cournos, author of "The Mask," and other novels.

AFTER PRINTING a weekly serial from the Bible for three months, the managing editor of the Topka State Journal, declares that the publication of the Bible has proved to be the greatest success of any feature ever printed by The State Journal. Moreover, it is being read by many subscribers as faithfully as would be the instalments of a popular novel.

"I HAVE taken a furnished apartment at 60 Albert Hall Mansions and have already met many of my old friends," writes Hamlin Garland, whose works were recently brought out by the Harpers in a uniform library edition. "Barrie had me to lunch and so did Kipling and Gilbert Parker. I had a delightful afternoon with Shaw, and a dinner with Galsworthy. Zangwill was in town for a day or two and we had tea together. My daughter Mary Isabel and I are to visit Joseph Conrad in the country, and also Thomas Hardy. Some day soon, we shall also see Masfield when we go to Oxford. I am to do some speaking but not much. Mrs. Garland and I are to be guests at the July Dinner of the P. E. N. Club which is, as you know, an international affair. Galsworthy is the head of it here. I am to talk for the English Speaking Union on the eleventh of July. However, we are not here primarily for social things. We are here to study London as much as possible (especially the historic London) and we shall set to work systematically to get its main features during the next two months."

TIPS FOR LIT'RY EDITORS

(Dedicated to Burton Rascoe)

If you would run a lit'ry sheet

Of what you eat, with whom you eat,

And how and when and where.

—Keith Preston in Chicago Daily News.

If the redoubtable Mr. Eddie Guest should write a poker poem, the refrain might be "It takes a heap o' drawin' to a house to make a full."—F. P. A. in the New York World.

Political Memoirs

ANOTHER well-known author has sought a private publisher for his book; the "Autobiography of Mayor Hylan" has been issued by the Rotary Press, 156 Broadway. This autobiography ran serially in a New York paper, and on its publication considerable newspaper comment was evoked by the report that prominent houses had refused to handle it. The reporters found, however, that this refusal to handle the book had only come from the customary hesitancy on the part of the retailer who was not sure of finding a sale for it.

If the Censor Comes

THE dispatches from London reported last month that the Bermondsey Public Library, England, had censored "If Winter Comes" and this report has caused comment in many directions. It proved, however, that the library had only left the book out because of a much depleted budget, and the librarian replies that they can even boast in their collection of fiction of having "Jude the Obscure" and "Rabelais" to show that they are not in the habit of such censorship. One of the clippings quotes the famous quip of Dr. Johnson when he was asked whether he did not consider a certain picture of Venus indecent. "No sir," thundered the great moralist of Fleet Street, "but the question is."

Souvenirs of the Cowboy

IN connection with the publication of Philip Ashton Rollin's book called "The Cowboy," Charles Scribner's Sons have arranged for a most interesting exhibit of Indian and cowboy material, which has attracted much attention in the windows where shown. It has already been exhibited at McClurg's in Chicago and the Old Corner Bookstore in Boston, and in both cases there were people two deep around the windows continuously. The material includes such striking items as a pair of "chaps" worn by a horse thief who was "shot out of them," a skull-cracker used by a Sioux Indian in the battle of Wounded Hill, a Navajo blanket worn by Sitting Bull in the same battle, a pair of spurs taken from a captured desperado, the "chaps" of Chief Washakie, a spade bit taken from "Opium Bob," a loaded quirt, the blanket of Geronimo and Kit Carson's lariat. Mr. Rollins has one of the most notable collections in the country of souvenirs of the plains.

THE MEDICI SOCIETY has in preparation, probably to be ready this fall, a two volume edition of translations by Andrew Lang from the Idyls of Theocritus, Bion and Moschus. There are to be twenty illustrations in color by W. R. Flint. Five hundred copies are to be printed, and twelve copies on vellum.

Book Inscriptions

VINCET STARRETT, writing in The Freeman "On Presentation Copies," has some very entertaining things to say. Among them:

"There are some famous inscriptions. One is to be found in every bookshop, repeated in a thousand and one volumes with a single change of phrase in each. It is this: 'Horace from Mamma.' The change substitutes Wilbur for Horace; or Burton, or Llewelyn, or Gilbert, or Paul, or Stanley; sometimes even Rasmussen. The number of volumes thus inscribed is colossal—incredible—and reveals a remarkable phenomenon which, I think, has escaped the knowledge of all previous writers about books. It is evident, tremendously evident, that 'Mamma' has given away more books than any person who ever lived, and it is strange that no one has attempted to run down the facts of the case and give them to the world. The question is: who was—or is—this 'Mamma,' whose bookly dispensations probably aggregate more than the total registration of the British Museum and the Bibliothèque Nationale? Borrow carried the Bible to Spain and made an admirable job of distribution, but 'Mamma' has spread the printed word from China to Peru in a hundred languages and dialects. 'Mamma,' greatest of colporteurs, dean of all free-library movements, is entitled to a far wider celebrity and recognition than are hers at present, and I am surprised that I should be (as I believe) the first to call the matter to public attention.

"A very rare form of inscription, yet one which occasionally may be seen, is this: 'Mr. J. Egerton Moss, with the compliments of the Publisher.' Not that it seems strange that a publisher should have friends to whom he will make gifts; but one does not expect a publisher to give away the books he has to sell, any more than one expects a friendly baker to distribute free loaves of bread. Still, I have seen this inscription, in one form or another, a number of times, and it has always interested me in the book. The recipient of such a gift-volume, of course, may look it in the mouth, as it were, the while he cynically mutters, 'Beware the Greeks bearing gifts!' He may read the work in the firm conviction that there is some 'catch' in the transaction; for why should a publisher of books give them away? Obviously, either because they are bad and will not sell, or because the tale is unfinished and the unsuspecting reader will later have to buy the sequel, or because the gift-volume is soiled and can not be offered for sale, or—you follow my line of thought! That is part of human nature. Similarly, if a benevolent person were to offer the average man a dollar, without provocation, the average man would examine it with minute attention and then ask, 'What's the matter with this dollar?'—and that even if the benevolent person were a friend. But why should not a publisher be proud of a fine novel carrying his imprint? He should be and is; and if there is a catch in his benevolence it consists merely in the pleasant thought, 'If Moss likes this thing as well as I think he will, he can't make me angry by spreading the glad tidings from Dan to Beersheba; and in all probability, he will actually say something of the sort to Moss the next time he meets him. Yet a publisher may hesitate to make gifts of inscribed books simply because they are his, and, in the vulgar jargon of the mob, 'cost him nothing.' One well-known publisher once told me as much. That is too bad. I, for one, should be happy to make a collection of books inscribed to me by their publishers, and shall be more than glad to furnish my address, for that purpose, to any publisher in the business. Books so inscribed should be the best fiction, the best poetry, the best essays, and the more expensive sets."

Important Ruling

THE Treasury Department at Washington has suspended for sixty days the ruling that books must be marked with the phrase, "Made in ———." Books now held in the Customs House will be released without further marking. It is hoped that the plea of the book-trade will be heard and that this Treasury Department ruling will not be applied to books, since they are, for all common-sense purposes, already so marked.

Protest Against Removal of Appraiser's Stores

PUBLISHERS as well as other retail merchants protested against the removal of the appraiser's stores at a public meeting at the Hotel Astor on July 26th. It is proposed to remove the stores from Washington and Christopher Streets to Brooklyn on the water front either at the foot of Twenty-Ninth Street or Fifty-Sixth Street. Publishers are anxious to avoid, if possible, the excessive trucking cost which this change would bring about. At the public meeting there was not one dissenting vote against a resolution to protest the removal of the stores. The Appraiser of the Port, Hon. F. J. H. Krackl, has expressed his desire to co-operate with the merchants, altho he has publicly announced his approval of the proposed change.

Curwood Wins Suit

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD won a suit July 25 against the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation, Warner Brothers and others, restraining them from using his name in the exploitation of a picture called "I Am the Law." The motion picture men advertised that the picture was based on a story by Curwood.

The defendants maintained they had bought nothing but Curwood's name and had not used any of his story. Curwood charged that two situations had been stolen from his novels, and said that "no reputable author would prostitute his work by selling his name." He contended that he granted only the right to elaborate his short story. Judge Knox, before whom the case was tried, in giving his decision, said:

"Elaboration of a story means something more than that the same should be discarded and its title and authorship applied to a wholly dissimilar tale. Curwood is yet a young man; he has achieved success and has reason to hope for much more. Upon the evidence before me I am unable to believe that he would jeopardize it all and sell his birthright for a proverbial mess of pottage."

American News Up-town Salesroom

THE American News Company has just opened a salesroom for the convenience of out-of-town buyers, in the up-town district of New York, at the Imperial Hotel, Room 247, which will be in charge of Joseph Scammell, a widely known salesman in the trade.

Here will be displayed a representative line of the best books of all publishers, including samples of the forthcoming titles announced for publication this year. There also are shown samples of staples and novelties for the stationery trade.

In its intensive campaign for the development of its wholesale business, the News Company has felt the need of a branch in the area of the terminals that would appeal to buyers who feel that Park Place is a little too distant for convenience.

A Veteran Retires

CHARLES T. COX, one of the oldest among the retail booksellers of New York, has sold his interests in the Harlem Book Co., to his partner, Max Salop, and retired from business. He will spend his first vacation in many years at his son's country home at Lake George.

Mr. Cox, who recently celebrated his seventy-seventh year, started as a bookseller forty years ago in a hay and feed store on Third Avenue at 42nd Street, where his rental was thirty-five dollars a month. In the course of time he moved to Harlem where he was in business for twenty-five years. During this period he conducted at different intervals five main stores and six branches. His son, Carol Cox, has been a bookseller on his own account in the Harlem district for nearly fifteen years.

The entry is transcribed from title page when the book is sent for record. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. When not specified the binding is cloth.

Imprint date is stated [or best available date, preferably copyright date, in bracket] only when it differs from year of entry. Copyright date is stated only when it differs from imprint date: otherwise simply "c." No ascertainable date is designated thus: [n. d.]

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

A MOVEMENT is on foot to buy and preserve the house occupied by Mark Twain while he was a resident of Hartford.

Pickwick, Tom Jones and Becky Sharp, in this order, are declared by Harold Brighthouse in the Manchester Guardian the three most famous names in English fiction.

The Lenox copy of the Gutenberg Bible has four leaves in facsimile. Gabriel Wells has presented the library with three leaves, the second, third and fourth of the prolog to replace facsimile pages.

Plans are nearly completed for the coming season at the belle maison gallery, Wanamaker's, where a number of exhibitions, mainly of modern art, will be held commencing early in September. The schedule so far includes an exhibition of water colors by Spanish modernists, a modern French exhibition, another of modern American etchings and wood block engravings. An exhibition which should be of very great interest will be devoted to pictorial aspects of New York.

The Bookman's Journal and Print Collector grows in interest especially to American collectors with every number. The leading article in the July issue is about "Shelley Treasures in America" by George H. Sargent. Others include "Theodor Dostoevsky: 1820-1881" by A. Jeans Courtney; "Modern Etchings and Their Value" by Harold J. L. Wright; "Cuola Press" by W. G. Balikie Murdoch; "Masterly Etchings by E. S. Lumsden" by Malcolm C. Salamon; and the usual departments of book reviews, sales, correspondence, etc. As usual it is well illustrated.

The English book binders are wondering what has become of the American market for expensive book bindings. Before the war much attention was given to gorgeous bindings for rich collectors and now this class seems to be buying genuine rarities with the most discriminating care. This is puzzling the English binder and dealer in this specialty. The writer of "Foreign Notes" in the New York Evening Post explains matters in this way: "They (the binders) apparently overlook or are unfamiliar with the fact that there was never any easy market in this country for this class of book. For a period some of the book sellers that cater to wealthy customers and a few agents who sell to the same class made a specialty of expensive bindings and after great ingenuity and industry sold a great many of them. The tendency to overcharge for these gaudy books and the growing preference for real rarities instead, in original condition if possible, have made more elaborate bindings difficult to sell, and consequently they are receiving much less attention. This is the chief reason why fewer are sold."

The Biblio, printed at Compton Lakes, N. J., will begin the story of "The Genesis of Mark Twain" in its August number and this feature will last for nearly a year. The romantic ancestry of Mark Twain, comprising material never before published and gathered after years of research, will comprise two separate serials: (1) the maternal line of Samuel L. Clemens from the Lamptons of Scotland, and (2) the paternal Clemens ancestry from the obscure London tradesman of the sixteenth century. It is said that Mark Twain died in ignorance of his ancestral history, beyond the marriage of his grandfather, Samuel Clemens, a poor farmer of Campbell county, Virginia. The story will be told of the widow, Elizabeth Clemens, who, with her four children, was the first gentlewoman to set foot on American soil, in 1610. It will also tell of the decline of an aristocratic family to the depths of ignorance and poverty, only to rise again to the heights of learning and world-wide fame.

John Crowne, the Restoration dramatist, is said to be the first Harvard man who made a living practicing a recognized form of literature. A bibliography of his writings, with extracts from the prefaces and the earlier version of the epilog to "Sir Courtley Nice," 1685, has been written by George Parker Winship, librarian of the Harry Elkins Widener Collection of the Harvard University Library. The work is a small quarto, printed on hand-made Kelmscott paper at the Harvard University Press, and has been published by Edgar H. Wells & Co. of this city, in an edition of one-hundred copies. Mr. Winship's bibliography gives a chronological list of the published writings of Crowne, in prose and verse, as well as full titles and collations. In the "Notes" are reprinted passages from Crowne's prefaces which throw light upon the history of the stage and remarks which show his connection with the Court. The prolog in "Sir Courtley Nice," which is reprinted for the first time since 1685, is longer and entirely different from the version which appears in the quarto edition of the play.

The Shelley centenary of this year, like that of Keats of a year ago, has awakened great interest among booklovers, and collectors and dealers have made the most of it, much rare material having changed hands in the last six months. But of all first editions of Shelley, or indeed of any author of his period, as the London Times points out, none possesses so much romantic interest as "Original Poetry: By Victor and Cazire," Shelley's first book printed in 1810. The very existence of this book was unknown, or rather forgotten, until it was discovered by Dr. Garnett and announced in Macmillan's Magazine in June, 1860. Thirty-eight years passed before a copy came to light. In 1898, Dr. Garnett edited and John Lane published a reprint. According to Stockdale 1,480 copies were printed and it now seems certain that almost the entire edition was destroyed. Five years after the discovery of the first copy, a second was found and in October, 1903, it was sold at Sotheby's in London for £600. A few months later a third copy was discovered. These three copies are all that are known at this time. One is in the Henry E. Huntington Library in California, another is in the Ashley Library of Thomas J. Wise, and the third is the star piece of the fine Shelley collection in the Wrenn collection of the library of the University of Texas.

The Bulletin of the New York Public Library, referring to the O'Brien gift of the various dime novel series, says: "The collection is literally saturated with the pioneer spirit of America. It portrays the struggles, exploits, trials, dangers, feats, hardships and daily lives of the American pioneers from the days of the Puritans to the death of Custer and the spirit which for two centuries and a half shaped the conquest of the continent north of the Rio Grande." And the Bulletin adds: "It is a literature intensely nationalistic and patriotic in character; obviously designed to stimulate adventure, self-reliance and achievement; to exalt the feats of the pioneer men and women who settled the country and to recite the conditions under which those early figures lived and did their work. It is to those obvious qualities that the cause of the immense vogue of the Beadle books is to be found during the generation. It was in these attributes also that their equally great popularity lay, and no serious student who seeks to understand the history of this country and many of its present tendencies can fail to obtain a better understanding of such matters by a study of the collection now on view. It is a choice in the study of mass psychology, as valuable to the university professor for its significant and historical revelations as it is to the gray-haired man to whom it recalls memories of boyhood." The keen interest shown in the exhibition of the O'Brien collection indicates that we are just beginning to understand the appeal of these books of a half century ago. We shall be under great obligations to Dr. O'Brien for his foresight and patient industry in gathering this collection and his public spirit in giving it to the New York Public Library.

WHAT THE BOOKS SHOW:

The sustained leadership of The Chicago Daily News among Chicago daily newspapers, in total volume of advertising printed, necessarily means leadership in most of the important classifications.

The Daily News' leadership in book advertising is typical, and significant as an inevitable consequence of The Daily News' highly developed, well-rounded reader interest.

Statistics supplied by the Advertising Record Company, an independent audit service maintained by all Chicago newspapers, show the following distribution of book advertising among Chicago newspapers for the first six months of 1922.

	COMPARISON
The Chicago Daily News	71,177 lines 71,177 lines
The Post	44,034 lines 44,034 lines
The Daily Tribune	12,708 lines
The Sunday Tribune	19,461 lines
The Daily Herald-Examiner	697 lines
The Sunday Herald Examiner	5,467 lines
The Journal	554 lines
The American	0 lines

The Daily News excess over the next highest score, that of the Post 27,143 lines

In the months of May and June, 1922, The Daily News carried 3,774 more lines of book advertising than ALL THE OTHER CHICAGO NEWSPAPERS DAILY AND SUNDAY COMBINED.

Remarkable as this showing may appear it is but a logical development of The Daily News' consistent policy of building up and maintaining a keen reader interest in all its departments.

New York G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS London

We were mistaken—

Last week we advertised in the Publishers' Weekly that the re-orders for Edith Wharton's new novel "The Glimpses of the Moon," were pouring in at the rate of 2,000 copies a day. We were far too conservative. Our Sales Department points out that since the day of publication and this in the face of an advance sale nearly four times as large as for "The Age of Innocence."

Re-orders have averaged

Six presses are now running day and night in an effort to keep "The Glimpses of the Moon" in stock.

"No one except a person inside could tell the story Edith Wharton tells" explains Fanny Butcher in the Chicago Tribune. But everybody—"inside" and "outside" seems anxious to read the story Mrs. Wharton tells.

When the Fall and Holiday book-buying rush begins—

YOU will want to have on your shelves an attractive well-assorted, salable stock of BOOKS—for this year BOOKS are going to be in greater demand as gifts than ever before. You will not want to find yourself overstocked on some items, and with no stock at all of others for which you have numerous calls. You will want the sort of stock that will leave your shelves well cleared at the season's close.

But the laying in of such a stock is no small problem. There are scores—or rather hundreds—of Book Publishers, each with a large and varied line, and a catalog containing in most cases hundreds of titles. There are varying margins of profit, varying degrees of known popularity and selling possibilities.

Perhaps you have time to come to New York to buy. By all means do so, if you can, and make your selections in our newly enlarged Sample Room, where you will find the most salable offerings of ALL PUBLISHERS displayed side by side, to be compared price for price and value for value!

* * *

But there are many dealers who cannot find the time for a personal visit. For them we have prepared an ORDER LIST of 1922 FALL AND HOLIDAY LINES, more representative and convenient than any similar list obtainable. It brings to your desk all the advantages of our Sample Room. It gives you the benefit of our experience of many years of Wholesale Dealers in the Books of All Publishers, our knowledge of comparative values and sales records, our facilities for collecting and assembling all publishers lines.

* * *

The best-selling Juveniles; the most promising Fall Fiction; standard series of the Poets, Classics, and Gift-Books; the best-selling Reprints, including all important Fall titles, all are to be found in this list. Both retail and trade prices are given, with quantity trade prices on the most popular.

* * *

It is an ORDER LIST pure and simple, not a complete catalog. It is therefore as compact and concise as we were able to make it—not bewilderingly bulky.

* * *

Banish the Book-Buying Bug-Bear this year! Make up your complete order from this ORDER LIST and place it with us at once so as to avoid transportation delays and secure the advantage of convenient terms.

"THE BOOKSHELF FOR BOYS AND GIRLS 1922-1923"

A COMPREHENSIVE LIST

The Bookshelf for Boys and Girls is prepared and printed by us with these main objects in view:—to help buyers of books for children find the right book, to help distributors of books serve book readers and buyers by providing a complete, comprehensive guide at a cost low enough to permit bookseller or librarian to give copies to enquirers without too large a financial outlay.

PERFORMS A REAL SERVICE

The Bookshelf for Boys and Girls is the only list so carefully prepared and edited as to deserve placing in parents' hands without reservation, and yet so complete as to serve and reach the interests of all classes of readers.

Customers will ask—What Books?
This list helps you answer intelligently.

It is edited by an independent board of editors actuated by but one motive—to prepare an adequate and unbiased list. It is published by the R. R. Bowker Co., 62 W. 45th St., New York. Office of the Publishers' Weekly.

Ready in August — We print from order only — How many will you want?

YOUR IMPRINT MAKES IT YOUR CATALOG

No other imprint will appear on or in the "Bookshelf for Boys and Girls" except that of the distributor buying it. So it goes out as the special catalog of librarian and bookseller in each locality. Offered prior to first printing at prices below those possible in making local and individual lists. One co-operative printing and publishing effort has lowered costs.

From Nursery Rhyme to Grown-up Time.

This list is a classified guide to all the best books for children, grouped under three main departments:

Books for the Very Little Ones, Books for Older Boys and Girls, and Books for Boy Scouts.

The Board of Editors.

The selection of titles in the Bookshelf for Boys and Girls is in the care of three competent and well-known librarians:

"For the Very Little Ones"—

Miss Clara W. Hunt,
Supt. of Children's Work,
Brooklyn Public Library.

"For Older Boys and Girls"—

Miss Ruth G. Hopkins,
Director Children's Department,
Bridgeport Public Library.

"For Boy Scouts"—

Franklin K. Mathiews, will be published, hereafter, with the

GARGOYLES
A DEVASTATING NOVEL

will appear on September 15th ($2.00).

This sincere, hilariously iconoclastic story moves around George Basine, a lawyer and politician, his mother, (a widow), his sisters Doris and Fannie, and their husbands, lovers, and hangers-on. Their intrigues, false romanticism, sensuality and personal characteristics are here set down. "Gargoyles" is a narrative of the artificial life existing in any larger city in America, and while Hecht's characters may seem sensual, often mean and insincere and unconscious that a union between the sexes should be based upon noble and beautiful ideals, instead of merely carnal desire and satisfaction, a more striking moral has rarely been pointed in American fiction.

As Hecht's milieu in "Gargoyles" is different from that of "Erik Dorn," so is his style. And instead of lyric prose, Hecht in "Gargoyles" paints the entire American scene in man-to-man, between-you-and-me, straightforward English. "Gargoyles" is a complete, exact, truthful novel told only as great novels are and should be told.

ANNOUNCING

An Innovation

THE MODERN LIBRARY

(Itself the most Successful Innovation in Publishing in the Past Decade)

Modern Library sales for 1922 are 43% ahead of last year's.

BEGINNING this Fall, instead of continuing our former practice of publishing our new titles in THE MODERN LIBRARY in one group, each season, we will issue ONE NEW TITLE on the 10th of EACH MONTH, beginning September 10th.

A new volume will follow on the 10th of each month thereafter, excluding June, July, August. This will make a total of nine new volumes to be issued during each year, on the new plan.

We will employ every resource of publicity to arouse the interest of booklovers and the general public in the new titles.

There is every reason why the reading public should look forward with as keen anticipation to the new MODERN LIBRARY volume on the 10th of each month, as the music-loving public does to the new Victor or Columbia Records.

"The Modern Library is one of the most stimulating factors in American intellectual life."

We will do more than our share—and we will provide you with the means to do yours. *An attractive wooden plaque, in which the monthly announcement of the new title, as well as a copy of the volume, can be inserted, will be sent to you, for display where you think it will do the most good. Mats for your own local advertising, and small circulars for distribution in your mail, your packages, etc., will be supplied.

It is shameful to relate that our MAIL ORDER sales of THE MODERN LIBRARY are nearly 40% of our entire MODERN LIBRARY business. We don't want that proportion of mail order business, and we are always doing everything within our power to stimulate sales through book stores. You might just as well get more of THE MODERN LIBRARY business by simply taking advantage of our aggressive advertising and sales promotion.

The first of the new titles, out September 10th, will be

Hendrik Van Loon's ANCIENT MAN

WITH MANY NEW DRAWINGS BY THE AUTHOR

The 9th of the new titles, to be published on May 10th of each year, will be the result of a ballot among the booksellers themselves!

We want the booksellers to tell us what masterpiece of modern letters should be added to the 100 titles which now make up THE MODERN LIBRARY and have given it its distinction in the world of present-day books.

Let us have not only your vote on the 9th title, but also your ideas and suggestions for making THE MODERN LIBRARY a bigger success for both of us!

*These very attractive, small plaques cost real money. We shall send them only to those booksellers who truly wish to help make The Modern Library an even greater success.

Important Censorship Case

ONE of the most important cases that have been up in New York City on the question of book censorship was heard before Judge Simpson, New York magistrate of the Fifty-Fourth Street Court on July 31st, the case of the people represented by the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice versus Thomas Seltzer.

The books which had been seized were D. H. Lawrence's "Women in Love," Arthur Schnitzler's "Casanova's Homecoming" and "A Young Girl's Diary." The Magistrate's decision after hearing much testimony and comment has been reserved for a later date. That these three books should not be brought under such restriction is the opinion of critics and of the book-trade, but without endeavoring to prophesy the Magistrate's judgment, the case deserves careful comment as it brings out the inherent weakness of this method of judging books. Even the Prosecuting Attorney thought that, and, in his final summing up, gave some suggestion that he felt that such cases should be brought before some kind of jury so that the opinion of a body of people could be heard instead of a court judgment based on selected witnesses. There seemed to be in his words a suggestion that play censorship in New York might point the way to better methods. It is possible, also, that Mr. Sumner for the Society for the Suppression of Vice would be glad to see some method introduced by which judgments could be made under other circumstances than by hearing before a Magistrate.

Many times in the argument one felt the futility of the constant questioning as to whether this or that book was suitable for "immature minds." One witness was asked whether she would select "A Young Girl's Diary" to read to a group of adolescent girls.

No one who has had the sudden awkwardness of coming across in group reading certain passages of the Bible or Shakespeare or Whitman can wish to testify that every book is just the right thing for reading aloud to immature minds. The continued emphasis on that point of view seems quite beside the point. The witnesses were much nearer the mark when they said that young people would not get three pages into Schnitzler or Lawrence without losing their interest. The road to good sense in book circulation does not lead to the weighing of every book by its effect on the immature mind. Adults of sense and background have a right to broader reading.

Neither are we moving in the right direction by having the court discredit the value of expert witnesses. There could not have been the slightest doubt in the minds of anyone who heard the witnesses produced by Thomas Seltzer that they were people competent to speak on these books and that they endeavored to speak without prejudice and in good faith. The discussion of the books and their effect on the reader by such men as Miles M. Dawson, attorney, formerly connected with the Hughes insurance investigation, Carl Van Doren, Gilbert Seldes, Mrs. Dorothea Brande, contributing editor of The New Republic, and Dr. Adolph Stern and Dr. Gregory Stragnell could not but be testimony worth utmost consideration, and the suggestion by the Prosecuting Attorney that in the judgment of morality in books such testimony was beside the point adds nothing to our methods of trial. Attorney Wilson believed that there could be no experts on obscenity or morality and that the opinion must be based on a cross-section view of the books from the average member of society, presumably as represented by the judge. Except for this constant effort to estimate the effect of the book on the immature mind, the Prosecuting Attorney conducted the case with dignity and point. Mr. Seltzer added to the importance of his trial by producing witnesses of the first order whose testimony printed in full would give an admirable criterion of the place of these books in current publishing. He also produced a quantity of reviews, showing that newspapers and periodicals of all kinds treated these books seriously and with no thought that they were a social menace.

On one issue the Prosecution's criticisms seemed to have point: the Attorney produced a circular announcing the publication of "Women in Love," showing that much emphasis was made of the fact that Lawrence's books were suppressed and that he himself knew they were open to the chance of falling into the category of pornographic books. The attorney also pointed out that this original circular bore no publisher's name and that this book, and also the volume of Arthur Schnitzler's was printed without the name of the publisher. Mr. Seltzer testified that this was done as there were collectors who liked books marked Privately Printed, but the impression must have undoubtedly been left with the court that the books were not published in the same straightforward way in which other books come to the market. The high priced limited edition may be the best way to market such books as this one of Lawrence's, but it would be much easier to prove that they were books worthy of average consumption if they were published in ordinary form. The Lawrence book did see the light in that shape in England as "The Rainbow" did here.

As Mr. Summer has previously testified, in one year's court actions appearing for the people, he had 165 cases and only 5 were on books, showing that the law was intended to cover indecent pictures and other material that no one tries to justify. What is apparently needed is some way to make better judgment as to how the cases against books are to be tried, so that volumes unanimously considered as serious and significant shall not be suppressed. The Society's attention can then be given to books for which no sound testimony could be produced as to their literary or social importance. The question of censorship is a serious one for our literature and our social welfare, and it is to be hoped that the judgment in this case will show a turn in the right direction.

Where Does Price Cutting Bring Us?

WE are printing elsewhere in this issue a detailed letter from the circulation manager of The Independent, sharply criticizing the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY for its editorial in the July 1st number which had commented on The Independent's recent offer of books in groups of 5 at cut prices. We welcome this analysis of the periodical point of view without withdrawing our criticism of the method taken to increase book reading.

The Independent's chief rejoinder is that the booksellers never try anything new to get circulation for books and therefore can hardly criticize magazines for testing out what might be a constructive idea. We venture the opinion that selling books by cutting prices is not a new idea. It is the oldest thing known in the book-trade. One does not need to take the testimony of this country only, but can look into the trade history of any large book producing country to find this to be the case. Increasing book demand by cutting the price is an unimaginative method, and it leads ultimately to decreased sale of books.

A discount from the list price of books is given to dealers in order to make it possible for them to meet general bookstore expense and to keep these books displayed in their communities. A magazine using current books to increase circulation or to increase its popularity does not meet these expenses and will not constructively and continuously build up a book service, which is the real need of this country.

The Independent can point to the fact that it has company in its idea of increasing book distribution by instancing the newly developed plan of the New Republic for book sales. The New Republic, according to the advertisement in the July 19th issue, will give any subscriber 15% discount on any books in print if this discount is applied to an extension of a subscription or to a new subscription, or will rebate a 10% cash discount on every $10 worth of books bought in case the subscriber does not wish to extend his subscription further. The books with these discounts are to be sent prepaid. Non-subscribers can get special prices on any book by asking for quotations.

The former plan of the New Republic was to give large display to certain new books with special offers in connection with a subscription, and publishers have argued that in allowing these books to be used for subscription building that they were getting valuable display space that increased sales thru other channels as well as thru this. Under the new plan, the publishers do their own advertising, and presumably the more they advertise in the New Republic the more books of theirs will be sold at the 10% cash discount, all books prepaid.

It is difficult to see how such offers can do anything but offset the result of the long fight that has been made to stabilize the market, and get books displayed in all parts of the country. That magazines did not care for a turn about of such price-cutting is shown by the fact that periodical publishers can by law prevent any unauthorized cutting of their rates. They have obtained such judgments, undoubtedly, because they felt that spasmodic price-cutting would lead ultimately to decreased circulation, and it is from that same point of view that the book-trade looks upon the general cutting of the prices of current books.

A good test of any practice is to try to estimate its value if it were applied to all outlets. Better salesmanship, better display, better signs, better mail order service, etc., are ideas that one store can perfect and another copy to the advantage of all the trade in the country. Price-cutting is a method that if all adopted, would lead to the disintegration of the book distribution of the country.

There are perhaps 200 book reviewing mediums. If every one of these started to sell books at 10% cash discount, how long would books be displayed in their several communities and what would be the effect on the size of the editions the following year? Price maintenance in the book field is good ethics and good business, and its growth in the last few years has meant better times for authors, an increase and a great stimulus to book distribution in all channels and a fair deal to the public.

General Business Condition

IN view of the concentrated national interest in the coal and rail strikes it seems perhaps remarkable that the many customary indexes to trade conditions show such slight effect.

The week ending July 15th showed the highest record of car loadings on all commodities outside of coal that the country has ever had, barring only some high-tide weeks in the fall of 1920. A scarcity of common labor has been reported in all parts of the country. Automobiles and tires have been making production records. Crop reports are quite generally good. House building is at its height. Price levels have shown general steadying with slight increases. The money market is easy, stock market strong, Liberty bonds at high levels. It would seem that in spite of European chaos which naturally effects us and the very serious strike crises that the country's recovery was going on and that retailers will feel the effects.

Large Scale French Publishing

ONE of the curiosities of the city of Tours, says the l'Exportateur Français, called the "Creusot du Livre," and well-known under the name of "Maison Mame" (firm of Mame), from the name of the family that has directed it since 1796. It includes huge printing and binding establishments which produce eight million books annually, and a sales department which can store in its reserve space an average of six million volumes.

It publishes the most varied types of works; in its catalogs are listed expensive books side by side with prize books for children, novels with books of prayers in French and in foreign languages, books of Latin liturgies—which sell all over the world—with French classics and Spanish classics, etc. Its shops work principally at the making of its own editions, but sometimes the "Maison Mame" will take outside work in printing, stitching or binding, when it is not too busy with its own publications and if the work to be done is important. Mame and his family also own paper mills on the Creuse river near la Haye-Descartes.

A Course in Current Literature

A COURSE in current literature is to be given this autumn and winter by Lloyd R. Morris. It will be devoted to lectures and discussion of the most significant books published in 1922-1923, American, British, and Continental writers. The books will embrace fiction, poetry, drama, and general literature. A parallel correspondence course will be given for readers not residing in or near New York.

Book Reviewing Syndication

THE Newspaper Enterprise Association, 1200 West Third Street, Cleveland, supplies daily features to newspapers and is now planning the establishment of a column of weekly tabloid book reviews.

"The Book Tatler" book reviews and literary gossip about authors, will be syndicated weekly by the Bigelow Press Bureau, 707 Brompton Place, Chicago, to newspapers in the middle west.

WORD COMES from Geneva that Dr. George Ellery Hale, Director of the Mount Wilson Observatory and author of "The New Heavens," published this spring by Scribner's, has been elected to membership in the international committee which, under the auspices of the League of Nations, is to study and suggest methods of intellectual co-operation thruout the world. Others previously elected to membership in this committee are Einstein, Mme. Curie, Gilbert Murray and Bergson.

The Price Cutter

Tell me not in smiling numbers,
 Selling costs are what they seem
 And the man who cuts for orders
 Gets the lion's share of cream.

If you strive to build a business,
 Do not be a human sieve;
 Letting leak your needed profit,
 Trusting luck will let you live.

Lives of dead ones all remind us
 What it means to sell on guess;
 Their departure makes us keener
 To sell right and not sell less.

For no trade can long be loyal
 To a man who's all regrets,
 Can't deliver—who's just living
 On the interest of his debts.

—CHAN FARCO BEACON
 in Direct Reflection.

"Find Your Cost!"

"FIND out your costs and tell them to the public," said Alvin E. Dodd, head of the domestic distribution department of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, recently to the convention of the Southern Retail Furniture Association.

"I am quite sure, that the real reason why retail merchants do not respond to the public demand for information regarding their costs is because they, except in very few instances, do not themselves know accurately.

"One of the most frequently heard complaints, is that merchants do not divulge their costs of doing business, and that until their attitude is changed the public is justified in believing that the cost or profit of retail distribution is beyond any reasonable necessity.

"Retailers have been entirely too backward in telling the public how they handle their jobs. We know that retail distribution is no longer a whispering gallery of secrets. There is nothing in your affairs which could not and should not be announced by megaphone from the top of the Washington Monument, and I hope soon to see the day when retailing will have mounted to as high a plane of ethics as that reached by medicine, divinity and law."

Mail Order Selling for Bookstores

By William S. Thompson

Manager of the Mail Order Department, G. P. Putnam's Sons

PART I

ERNEST ELMO CALKINS, in a recent number of Printers' Ink, proposes a million dollar advertising campaign to sell reading to the public, that is a campaign to make reading "the thing to do," to increase the desire of the public to read, and hence the sales of books, just as, at different times desires and sales have been created for automobiles, chewing gum, phonographs, radio apparatus and many other things. However practical Mr. Calkins' proposition may be, there can be no question as to the existence of the cause for its inception, as to the need of both publishers and booksellers for a larger sale of books in a wider field, not an increased number of titles—too many books are published now—but a greater book buying public, an increased sale of each of the really important and readily marketable books published each year.

There is a very simple and comparatively inexpensive way in which the bookseller may widen the field of his activities. He does not need larger discounts as much as he needs a greater turnover, more business, on practically the same overhead. He can assure himself of an increase of sales, he can create business which never existed, he can get in touch with hundreds of people who would never come into a bookstore, he can sell books to people who had no intention whatever of buying them, he can make hundreds of permanent book buyers, he can concentrate on the worth-while books, the really important books, if he will make up his mind to go after business intelligently thru the mail.

Markets of which he does not dream exist at the bookseller's very door. The late Horace E. Hooper is said to have used as a basis for his vast publishing enterprises the "thirst for knowledge" which he knew to exist in the minds of the people. Human nature has not changed and this thirst has not been quenched in the period which has elapsed since Mr. Hooper's larger operations. People are much alike in this respect the country over, and yet what is the average bookseller doing to quench the thirst for knowledge in the people of his town or city? How can he reach such a market effectively except by mail? What other means can he use to sell books to the thousands of people who never come into a bookstore, yet who would willingly buy certain books if placed before them in an attractive light? Also what surer means can he adopt to reach quickly those who are accustomed to visit his store regularly?

Here are two illustrations of utterly unsuspected markets. A few days since, one of the members of our house was leaving for his train when he was accosted by his butler, a native of Poland. In his somewhat faulty English, the butler finally made it clear to his employer that he had recently received by mail a circular of Putnam's Minute-a-Day English, that he had sent for the book and liked it and thought it would help him to learn English, and that he, therefore, wanted to pay the price and keep the book. Recently the colored elevator man in an apartment house asked me where he could get a dictionary. He was studying English at one of the night-schools.

Probably neither of these men would, on his own initiative, set a foot inside a bookstore to buy anything, and yet here are two good instances of the market for books.

The thirst for knowledge, however, is not confined to the butlers and the elevator boys, nor to any particular class. The highly cultivated man or woman shows a thirst for knowledge, when he or she is looking forward to the possession of a highly important current book, and it is in the marketing of a book of this kind with a wide possible field that the bookseller has the best chance to make a profit in selling by mail. For this reason, this series of articles will deal more particularly with the opportunities for the bookseller in the field of advance promotion by mail of an important book.

Visualize, if you can, in each of the bookstores of the country, a list of customers and prospective customers, properly planned, correctly classified and kept up to the minute in accordance with specific instructions by one or more people who take a real interest in making such a list all it ought to be. By means of a series of lists like this and printed matter with dealer's imprint, a publisher could carry the message of an important forthcoming book to practically all the bookbuyers and prospective buyers in the country. The result of such mail promotion would be a vastly increased advance sale, enabling the bookseller to place a larger first order, at a higher discount, and the publisher to manufacture in larger quantities at lower cost, as well as an increased subsequent sale, with mutual advantages to both publisher and bookseller.

For the creation of a country-wide service to present and future customers, to market current books by mail, there is joint responsibility—upon the publishers to furnish salable books, with properly written and standardized imprinted matter, and upon the bookseller to create and maintain adequate lists of customers and prospects, and to address and mail promptly the printed matter furnished by publishers. Under these conditions, the natural enthusiasm of publishers over their new books would lead to the receipt by the bookseller of many more offers of printed matter than he could possibly use. Some of them would be for books not worthwhile from the booksellers' point of view, some for books not worth even the cost of manufacture. In choosing the books on which he is to make mail efforts, the good judgment of the bookseller himself would have to be his guide. Eventually he will learn how to estimate the probabilities of a sale by mail just as well as he can now estimate the probable demand over his counter. Once in a while a book is announced for future publication about which there can be no doubt in the mind of any bookseller. It is an important book, with a wide field, and will have a big sale, and that is the kind of book to mail circulars for which the bookseller will, if he knows how to sell by mail, gladly send the boy over to the stamp window.

The proper installation of a mail order department in a bookstore, it is well to concede at the outset, is not easy. It requires the constant attention of some one at its head, who is really interested in it, and whose first duty shall be to take proper care of it. Such a person must have initiative, a love for detail and a full appreciation of the possibilities of the business. The heads of other departments must understand thoroly that the purpose of the mail order end is not to take business away from their departments, but to create business which the store would not get otherwise. For awhile until it is under way, it will need considerable attention from the heads of the business.

Also, the installation of such a department involves some expense, for cards, and cabinets in which to file cards properly, guide cards, and the various little things which go to make a thoroly efficient card index system, as well as for clerical assistance.

The maintenance of such a department, after it is well started, is simpler and less expensive. It will, as said above, require the undivided attention of one person at least, and of more than one as the list grows, and the daily number of entries and changes increases accordingly. It should have all the help necessary. Its value lies in the records being kept up-to-date all the time, not once a month or twice a year. It will require also the services of a sufficient number of piece-workers or day-workers, hired either direct or thru an agency to turn out addressing and other physical operations by the day and hour when they are scheduled to go into the mail. All of this work is full of detail, and all persons employed on it should be fond of detail, and expert at it, otherwise the work will not go out on time and the information on which the department depends for success will be lacking when needed.

In mail order work there are four main factors: 1. The List, 2. The Books to be Sold, 3. The Printed Matter which Sells Them, 4. The Physical Operations Involved. Let us now consider in the order given each of these factors as it affects the bookseller.

The List

The list of names to which printed matter is mailed is by far the most important of the four factors mentioned above. It may be considered best, perhaps, by taking the case of a bookseller who is starting mail order work and who has never maintained a list. His aim should be to have on his lists, eventually, the name of every person in his territory who is an habitual buyer, an occasional buyer, or even a possible buyer of books.

He will, therefore, proceed to build three different lists to be known respectively as Buyers, Prospects and Possibles Lists.

The Possible list will be on 3x5 cards with horizontal ruling only, the Prospect list on specially printed 4x6 cards with a prospect tab and the Buyers on the same 4x6 card as the Prospects, but with the prospect tab cut off.

On p. 469 and 470 are illustrations of the front and back of a 4x6 card designed for bookseller's use. There are eleven vertical rows of squares for use in indicating the class or classes of books in which Prospects and Buyers are interested. The first 10 rows are numbered to correspond to the Dewey Decimal Classification, the last row would be used for fiction, reference works, and anything else not included in the Dewey Classification. With this number of squares it will be possible to take care of the majority of regular wants.

The person who fills out the card will indicate, by a cross in ink or by pasting a small round colored sticker, the square which corresponds to the need of the person who has filled in the form requesting to be placed on the list.

Thus in the Dewey system Domestic Economy is number 640. On the card of anyone interested in books on this subject, square number 64 would be crossed or have a sticker pasted on it. Then when a new book on this subject was published only cards with No. 64 crossed or pasted would be addressed. The colored sticker indicates the card quicker to the addresser than the ink cross. It is quite possible that some people will show interest in half a dozen different classes, and on the cards of each of these persons all such squares would be indicated.

The months at the left and the numbers 1 to 31 at the top of the card together form a memorandum by which a reminder can be sent to a customer on any particular date of, say, an approaching anniversary and the need for a present. To indicate the month a small round colored sticker is pasted over the edge of the card. To indicate the day a clip is placed over the top. By turning a tray of cards so the left edges show, all cards to be written in a certain month can be picked out and placed by themselves. The clips will then show the day on which the customer is to be written.

The first line, "name and title," indicates that the name should be entered on the card just as it is to appear later on the envelope. It is quite important that such expressions as "Dr.," "Prof.," "Hon.," "Senator," etc. according to circumstances should appear here and on the envelope which bears the message. Exactness in the name as well as in the address is a positive necessity for results.

The possible variations of this card are, of course, numberless. Some booksellers may not wish to go to the trouble of conducting a predating system at all. Others may not wish to carry as many classifications on their cards as are here indicated. For classifications not to exceed 31 in number the ruled squares could be left off entirely, and clips or pasters over the 31 numbers at the top of the card would do very well indeed. Some may not wish all of the information about a customer which appears here, others may wish more.

On the back of the card is provided space for the notation of purchases. This, in the writer's opinion, is important, as it enables a card to be thrown out of the list, as suggested later, after a reasonable time has elapsed without any purchases. It is also a general guide as to the kind of books bought by that customer.

In starting the list, available names divide automatically into two classes. (1.) Those who have previously been customers, on credit or for cash. (2.) Those with whom the bookseller has had no dealings. The compilation of the list will therefore begin by drawing off on the special 4x6 cards, with the prospect tab cut off, the names of charge and cash customers for, say, two years back. This section will, of course, be the very best part of the completed list, and in furnishing information for it, the head of the business and the entire sales-force should unite. Many cash buyers will be known to the sales-force by name, even tho the names do not appear in the sales-records. All names pect tabs, and for any one name desired in whichever list it might be, there would be but one place to look. The disadvantage of this method is that later one list at a time will have to be addressed, and it is an inconvenience for the recording clerks to have to work on, say, the Buyers' cards, when the Possible list only is being addressed. It means constant running and hunting to locate the proper trays.

Under this list building system, the Possibles are being continually fed by names secured from the various directory and daily paper sources, the Prospects are being continually fed by transfers from the Possibles, and the Buyers are continually being recruited from the Prospects.

The principal objects of this selective process are to avoid waste of circular matter and to aim as directly as one can at those people who are most likely to be interested in a certain book.

The Buyers will be the smallest list, the Prospects next, and the Possibles, naturally, the largest. Every month the Buyers and Prospects who have been on the list for a year, without making any purchases, should be withdrawn, put in a separate list and circularized for reinstatement.

The list building process must go on continually. There never will be a time when any bookseller will be able to say definitely that his lists are complete. Names can be added constantly, owing to newcomers in town; names must be taken off constantly owing to deaths and removals from town; addresses almost without number will have to be changed, especially at the moving seasons; names will have to be changed owing to marriages. The contact of the bookseller and his force with many customers is so close and so intimate that the utmost care must be taken to avoid errors.

It takes time to build good lists, but it pays in the end. It can't be done in one month or in six, but at the end of a year's following of a systematic plan the bookseller will have lists which will be a real asset in his business.

"The Independent's" Summer Reading Menus

By H. Askowith

A Letter From the Publication Manager of "The Independent and Weekly Review."

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY rang a false alarm in its editorial entitled "Misusing New Books," in the July 1st issue, and you owe your readers an apology. Of course it is also true that you owe The Independent an apology, for you accuse The Independent of several horrible misdeeds which your own "complex" read into a worthy effort. But that does not matter so much. It is your readers, chiefly booksellers, zealously guarding the list prices of their books, whom you have unnecessarily alarmed by the cry of incendiarism. You thought that we were burning down the whole structure of the bookselling business when, as a matter of fact, all we were doing was starting a livelier fire on the cold hearth—but apparently the flues are choked—and we created a lot of smoke which made you shout "fire!"

Until someone does succeed in waking up the greater portion of the book-trade to livelier methods of merchandising, there will continue to be shouts of "murder" and "treason" when anyone starts something. You of all men have the unique opportunity, as well as the power, at the head of the leading journal of the trade, to lead the way to more successful methods. Instead of which, you are championing a protective fight for traditions and shibboleths and mythical sanctities which can only serve to keep the book-trade exactly where it has been for many years.

Your editorial talks of "the importance of books" and "bookselling" and "the distribution of books" as sanctified abstractions which we must respect and worship at all costs, regardless whether the public is served or not. As soon as the book-trade stops worrying about price maintenance as an end in itself and turns to the study of methods of selling books, meeting the public needs, enlarging the book buying public, and tempting people to buy books, there will be a much greater likelihood of increasing book sales.

The book-trade is only wasting time in attempting to suppress anything, whether it be price-cutting or combinations of books with magazine subscriptions or any other attempt to sell books in newfangled ways. Publishers would not continue, as they are doing, to make deals with magazine publishers for combination offers if experience had shown that such combinations did any injury to their total sales. For years before such combinations were ever thought of, the book-trade has had its chance to demonstrate what they can do for a book. No old channel of distribution has any right to complain if a new channel can win out against it by doing better for both the manufacturer and the public. The only recourse left to the older channel is to so mend its ways as to compete effectively with the newer channel.

It was entirely and exclusively with the idea of indicating one way in which the public might be better served by our booksellers that we initiated the plan of "Summer Reading Menus" in our Summer Reading Number. There are one hundred other ideas that the book-trade could adopt to the profit both of themselves and the public. Other trades that have pushed forward have done so because they have not been bound by any such shibboleths as the book-trade seems bound to maintain at any cost. Our "Menu" idea is a slight reduction in price on a combination sale to one purchaser of four or five or more books. Please note that the full list price was given for each single book and no reduction was offered except for the combination order, to be sent to one address. This follows a sound merchandising principle. The overhead cost of one sale of five books is certainly less than the combined overhead cost of five separate sales of the same books. Moreover, the spirit back of the entire idea of suggesting groups of books carefully selected by a recognized authority, and offered at a slightly lowered price for each group, with the inducement of direct delivery to the summer address, thus avoiding packing in a trunk, was to tempt the public to buy more books by saving them a lot of trouble in selecting, buying, and transporting them, and at the same time offering the slight additional lure of an economic advantage in buying several books instead of just one or two. Obviously, to anyone not blinded by the worship of an empty principle, this idea serves both the public and the bookseller.

It is only along this track, on which we attempted to give the book-trade a gentle push that much progress will ever be made.

Instead of paying tribute to this suggestion of ours, and advising the book-trade to pay heed to it and make money for themselves by acting on it, you misread our motives entirely and charged us with concocting a plan "not for promoting the sale of books but for using the public interest in books to promote The Independent." You are careful to imply that the combination offer was in some fashion linked with a subscription to The Independent or limited to our subscribers. If you will read the feature in question more carefully, you will find that there is no such limitation, that neither the word subscriber nor the word subscription is used, and the spirit of the whole offer is summed up clearly in the sentence, "The Independent Book Service is glad to do everything it can to help along the wholesome habit of summer reading—of good books!" In fact, without attempting to dictate to the book-trade, we were hoping that the booksellers thruout the country would take the hint and apply it in their own way.

After all, therefore, your first enthusiasm over the announcement of these book menus and the eagerness of the "Year-Round Bookselling Committee" to call the attention of the trade to it, were both amply justified.

Ulbrich's Semi-Centennial

THE Otto Ulbrich Company of Buffalo, New York, is celebrating this year, its fiftieth anniversary. Its career has been long and it has also been interesting. It has numbered among its patrons, all Buffalonians who have achieved fame in the nation, state or city. When Grover Cleveland was a rising young lawyer in Buffalo, he used to visit Ulbrich's daily. Caruso always visited Ulbrich's when he was in the city. Three generations of Buffalonians have bought books there. The store was first established on Main Street in the Association Building, where the Iroquois Hotel now stands. The Association Building was remodeled into the Richmond Hotel and the Ulbrich store was moved to the old Arcade Building, where the Brisbane Building is now. When the Arcade Building burned, the third start was made in the German Insurance Building. In 1894, Mr. Ulbrich leased the building at 386 Main Street the site of the present store. The store carries a large stock of miscellaneous books, fiction, standard sets, reference works, and juveniles. Otto Ulbrich, founder of the firm, was born in 1842, and came to this country a mere lad. He was a lover of literature, art and music. He was one of the organizers of the Buffalo Orpheus. He died in 1903. In 1904, the business was incorporated under the firm name of Otto Ulbrich Company, Inc.

THE POETRY and drama section of Macmillan's fall list includes a number of famous names. There is to be a new play by John Masefield's "Mellony Holtspur, or The Pangs of Love," a new poem of Masefield's called "The Dream," a light comedy by St. John Ervine, pleasantly entitled "Mary, Mary Quite Contrary," and a new Andreyev play, "The Waltz of the Dogs." Padraic Colum's new collection of verse, "Dramatic Legends and Other Poems" and a reissue of his earlier volume, "Wild Earth." Edwin Arlington Robinson's "Collected Poems" will appear in a new form in four pocket-size volumes, and Monroe and Henderson's "New Poetry" in a new edition which includes the best poems of the past five years, and so brings the anthology up-to-date.

THE ADAPTATION OF AN OLD ENGLISH SHOP FRONT TO GOODSPEED'S NEW BOOKSHOP

A New Bookshop for Old Beacon Hill

A BOOKSTORE front with the real flavor of the old English shops has been the result of the opening on Ashburton Place, Beacon Hill, Boston, of a branch of the well-known Goodspeed's Bookshop of 5 Park Street, Boston. Ashburton Place runs parallel to Beacon Street from the Court House to the State House and seems likely to become one of the book centers of Boston. The new Goodspeed bookshop has for its front the small-paned windows so well-arranged and so much in keeping with the books displayed that the passerby has every temptation to stop and look over the titles and the prints. At each side of the door as one enters are boxes of books at ten and twenty-five cents. This device has always proved the best of all ways to get people to pause at a shop as well as the best agency for distributing the large number of books that library buying accumulates. The old-fashioned interior of the store has been carefully preserved, and books now collected are especially along the line of the theater, memoirs and history. By winding stairs of easy grade one is taken to the second floor, where the print department, under L. A. Holman, now has opportunity for full display which its rapidly growing importance necessitated. The quiet rooms give wall space for displays covering the progressive history of prints, special artists, new items in stock; and the well-arranged files give easy access to vast stocks of etchings and engravings of all periods. The historical portraits, so widely used for extra illustration, are carefully indexed by period and artist, this feature being a specialty in the house along with the etchings and engravings for framing. If there is advantage to the dealer in putting the incoming customer into the proper mood, the new Goodspeed store admirably fulfills this purpose.

BOOK advertisements of this sort, sandwiched in between a four-column invitation to inspect new spring arrivals in orchid tweed suits and a two column appeal in behalf of Five-Ninety-Eight hats, are among the most conspicuous of those things which differentiate the book section of a popular department store from all other institutions engaged in the selling of books.

Book shops generally adopt a style of advertising very simple, very chaste, very severe. They realize that their appeal is to an intellectual elite for whom the mere notice of good things to be had suffices. They know, too, that the back-bone of their business is a clientele developed by years of service, and affected very little by large announcements in bold face concerning any subject. Besides, what are the reviewers and the publisher's blurbs for—if not to awaken enthusiasm; leaving to the retail dealer the relatively simple task of maintaining a readily available supply?

Department stores, however, know no such passive attitude in the other fields in which they participate, and take but little cognizance of it in book selling—the book department is just one out of thirty or forty, distinguished only in the records of the store by a number or a letter, and required to meet quotas with as much zest as do its fellows devoted to art needlework or silk hosiery.

And when it is necessary to "pep things up" a bit in the books the advertisements scream just as lustily as they do over exceptional values in plaid gingham, brassieres or dresses for the oversized woman. And when the month-end sales come along, and the after-holiday clearances and the semi-annual remnant days, the book department is expected to show interesting special prices in bold black type with the same enthusiasm as do the thirty-nine other departments that make up the store.

Altho a well-stocked book section in a department store may offer quite as complete an assortment of the classics, the lighter essayists and the more serious of the younger British novelists as do its competitors who deal in books alone, it has to make far too decided an appeal to an un-bookish public and rubs shoulders far too intimately with the decidedly unintellectual to present quite the same atmosphere as that created within the walls of a strictly literary establishment. It has to have ever at hand those things which will suit the people who never think of entering a regular book shop.

There are a lot of them—these folk not of the bookish elite, and the department store book section sees them often. Their needs for reading matter are settled with startling ease and expediency; the idea of a shop filled entirely with books halfway frightens them, exactly as the person accustomed to the simple fare of a Hoosier homestead is apt to grow affrighted before the elegant and abundant menu placed before him by the waiter in a pretentious metropolitan hotel dining room. They (returning to those who but sometimes read) have no cause and but little inclination to enter a book store.

In a department store they suffer no such qualms. So extensive are its offerings that their needs are apt to swirl them thru its hospitable doors several times a week or even several times a day. Its aisles are known; it has for them a certain homey feeling. And, naturally, the book section benefits. It ceases to be an austere establishment that frightens with an array of bindings and book-worms and becomes but another department, thru which one may fearlessly pass en route from the silverware to the toilet articles or from the jewelry to the knit underwear. Stopping and looking around even becomes a simple matter, pleasantly unawesome. Purchase, especially if the price savors of a bargain by terminating in an eight or nine rather than the customary five or cipher, becomes a real pleasure.

These things the gentlemen who control the destinies of our department stores, particularly those in the smaller cities, know, and it is their delight and to their profit to give this unbookish public from whom they gain, every zest in buying. Popular copyrights, presenting as a whole the lighter sort of fiction, made gay with brilliant paper wrappers, are apt to be the most conspicuously featured of all. The lure of the bargain, so effective in other departments, is not disregarded, and no store-wide sale omits the books. Whenever possible, prices are cut that magic penny or two which gives their price quotation an easier sound. Bookselling, comes as near to losing its leisurely charm in a department store as anywhere.

Important in this connection, of course, is the atmosphere of briskness and of discipline, of bells and tube systems and floor-walkers and routine which constantly serve to remind the book purchaser in a department store that he is in a department store and not in some quaint and chatty shop. If the book section itself is comparatively free from these things, near-by departments within easy sight and hearing are filled with them. There is ever before one the evidence of system, and of intricate sub-systems, traces of which the customer only half glimpses. Salesgirls trained to department store selling rather than sympathetic book salesmanship and coached ardently never to permit a customer to stand unattended, approach one at every move, and are apt to decrease among real book browsers and lovers the pleasure in the book one does not intend to buy; at least, "not just today, thank you."

But is it easy to criticise, and in no sense would this writer intend to belittle the important place of the department store book section. If for no other reason than its inducing an unbookish public into an interest in books of any sort, does it deserve at least a small wreath of laurel. And when it is remembered that in many smaller cities, the department store book sections are the only important book shops to be found, all should be willing to subscribe to one of bay, with gold ribbons, perhaps, entwined. And, when going still farther, we consider, how drawing upon their financial resources, advertising facilities, equipment and assembly spaces, department stores are enabled to advance the cause of reading by such important and far-reaching events as attain a climax in Marshall Field and Company's monumental book fair, all should be very happy to withdraw mere foliage completely and supply a "small but costly crown."

How's Business?

Simple Sets of Figures Tell Business Conditions

By Albert R. Crone

THE successful bookshop has a simple book-keeping system that tells what the "turn-over" is, what the gross profit is, what the overhead is and what the approximate condition of the business is month by month.

The unsuccessful bookshop proprietor often has no method of book-keeping other than his head and his pocket. He does not know what profits it to sell books.

The accompanying reproduction of a sample sheet modelled upon a form discussed by Leopold Minster in his "Retail Profits, Turn-over and Net Worth" (U. P. C. Book Company $1) is presented here as a simple model for determining the essential condition of a bookshop's business. It tells at any time the amount of stock on hand, it tells the months of big sales and big purchases and the corresponding low ebb and if kept up thru the years offers a comparative showing season after season. It tells the gross profit. It tells the number of times stock "turns" in a year. These are important things to know about your business. Its good health is gauged by these charts and the reading of them, and the results of the reading mean success or failure.

For the purposes of illustration we have selected a bookshop whose yearly business amounts to $60,000. We find that this bookshop has on hand at inventory, January 1, 1921, a stock amounting to approximately $8,151.70; we find that the bookshop buys in January $6,288.95 worth of books (cost price and inward delivery). Thus the total cost of goods during January equals the stock on hand at inventory $8,167.70, plus the purchases $6,288.95 or a total of $14,456.65.

We find that the bookshop sold in January $5,629.30 worth of books (selling price). Now, gross profit in our bookshop is estimated to average 35 per cent. on sales. Each bookseller may by experience determine this percentage for himself. If 35 per cent. on sales is gross profit, then our bookshop earned a gross profit in January amounting to $1,970.26. The cost of the sold goods during January represents the difference between the gross profit, $1,970.26 and the total selling price or $3,659.04.

Now, obviously with the end of January the condition of our original inventory plus our January purchases has been effected by the sale of $5,629.30 worth of goods. What is our stock on February 1st? Our system gives us the answer. . . . By subtracting from the total cost, $14,456.65 (obtained from the addition of January 1st inventory and purchases during January) the total cost of sold goods, $3,659.04, we have our new stock inventory for February 1st of $10,791.61.

This same set of figures applied each month gives us the condition of our business month by month thru the year. If we maintain our books year by year, we can compare conditions one year against another and note any conditions of oversupply or low sales which portray the state of health of the bookshop.

As we come to the end of the year we get our final inventory from our books and check it against an actual inventory then taken to find if any discrepancies exist. By adding up our various columns, we get the totals on each. We can find our total gross profit for example. By adding our thirteen inventories, and dividing by thirteen, we find our average stock, monthly, to be $10,910.36. By dividing our total cost of sold goods for the year ($39,000) by an average stock ($10,910.36) we find that we "turned" stock about 3.57 times and are in a good state of health.

There remains for us—month by month and thru the year to determine our net profit—that profit remaining after apportioning and deducting overhead charges of all character.

Let us look at Chart No. 1. We find that our estimated inventory for June, let us say, amounted to $4,469.70 and that we purchased $2,403.10 of goods, which with inward carriage charges which we found were $49.10 brought the cost of purchases for June to a total of $2,452.20. Turn to Table 2. By adding our inventory for June to our purchases, we have a total gross credit amounting to $11,921.90.

We have found that our total gross sales for June amounted to $4,223.80 and that the resulting inventory as of July 1st was $9,167.43. By adding these two we find that our total debits were $13,391.23. Now our gross profit for June was represented by the subtraction of total credits from total debits giving us a resulting gross profit for June of $1,469.33. To this we add the amount earned from discounts thru prompt payment of bills $24.—so that our actual gross profit is increased to $1,493.33.

We want to find our net profit for June. So we apportion our overhead for the month in the manner shown in the table. The percentage of each expense against sales represents figures closely parallel to the results of a recent survey covering a number of bookstores. We find that our overhead charges, including all salaries, amounted to $1,212.78. Subtracting this total from our gross profit of $1,493.33—shows us that our net profit for the month of June was $280.55. This simple set of figures carried month by month and thru the years gives us a comparative condition of business year against year, corresponding month against corresponding month.

Cost System Used by a Bookseller

By Ernest Dawson

Dawson's Bookshop, Los Angeles, California.

ONCE a year we take a physical inventory which is taken on the last or the first day of the month. To this figure we add the cost of all purchases made for cash or credit during a particular month. We have in front of our cash register a sheet on which the cost and sale price of every item sold is placed (the cost figure is of course in a private mark). These are totaled each night and at the end of the month these daily sheets are added together with credit sales. We then have the cost of our total sales and our total sales and, subtracting, we get our gross profit.

We, of course, keep a careful record of every expense including depreciation and each month's share of taxes, insurance, interest on investment, salaries of proprietors as well as employees. By subtracting gross expenses from gross profit we get our net profit.

At the end of the year if there is a discrepancy between the inventory as found on our books and the physical inventory an adjustment is made. Some times this has been in the form of a profit and sometimes a loss, but the difference is not great.

We keep a double entry system of book-keeping which is in charge of a young lady who at the present time gives about five days a month exclusively to this.

Of course every item that comes in has to be cost marked, and, in buying large libraries as we frequently do, we have a sheet in our work room on the right hand column of which is the total cost with freight, express and cartage added; on the left side we put the estimated cost as the goods are marked. Usually the one who marks the books works it out so that the cost is put on exactly but if for any reason this cannot be done a plus or minus figure is carried over for a future transaction and in the course of a month this works itself out without any difficulty.

I used to keep separate columns for each clerk but I found in developing the store spirit it was better not to show the total sales of each clerk as it created a certain amount of jealousy. As our net profits are shared equally by every member of the store force the incentive is for all to pull together. One-third of the net profits are distributed monthly to the store force.

An extension of the system as above outlined that I may use later is to have a sales slip for each sale and have entered the cost and selling price. In this way the various departments would show how they pay. For instance a certain mark could be used for Art Books, Americana, etc., or any other class of books and it would then be possible to see what the turn over in that department is. This would necessitate a Cashier who would give much more time to the cost system than is at present required.

To me it is one of the most satisfactory features of my business to know at least monthly (and oftener if required) just exactly how much is being made or lost.

We start with an actual inventory figure as I said above. For instance, this year we close all day Saturday, July 1st, for Inventory, and to this figure we add each day's purchases made for both cash and credit. At the end of the month we total the cost of the sales made and in this way on the first of each month we get an actual inventory. I tried for several years the approximate method but this was unsatisfactory, particularly in the old book business, where the profits are so variable. I often hear people say that such a system takes too much time but I have never found it so and even if it took twice the time it does I would continue it because it enables me to know just where I stand. I recall, for instance, one month when we held an exhibition of some English prints, spending quite a little money on advertising and had extra help to handle the crowds, it looked as tho we were doing lots of business but at the end of the month we found that, on the other hand, we had actually run behind about $150.

Towards the end of each month different members of the store force and I will frequently make estimates of the net profit or loss and it is sometimes laughable to see the great difference in the estimates. Certainly actual figures are worth more than all the approximations one can have.

Good Book-Making

AN example of trade printing which might be in the hands of every collector or designer of printing comes to hand from Manchester, England, a supplement which was issued with the Manchester Guardian but which was arranged and produced by the Cloister Press at Heaton Mersey near Manchester. The publication, which is in large folio form, is called "The Craft of Printing. A Brief Review of the Progress and Present State of Printing Arts." Whether as an example of careful typography, of good layout or of interesting text on the present state of typography, this book is a stimulus to better typographical handling. Among the articles of special interest is one on "The History of Printing Types," with which are produced examples of some twenty-five different faces that illustrate the progress of type design. It is interesting in looking over this selection made by the writer to see that of the six types added to the printer's repertoire in the last hundred years, four are designed by Frederic W. Goudy of this country. The classical Roman capitals are given in Hadriano and the Goudy modern and the Goudy open. A type that is given its proper emphasis is the Garamond type, designed four hundred years ago, of which the reproduction by the American Type Foundry Company has been used. This type is coming into increasing favor in many directions. The writer suggests that however admirable is the revival and readoption of old models, these mines are in great danger of being worked out and the real remedy for bad type designing is not to be found in the reappearance of ancient models, however good, but in the evolution of a school of beautiful writing. It was, he says, the existence of tradition of beautiful writing that made it possible for Jenson and Garamond to design their admirable creations. "An Outline of the History of Printing" is also included in the publication, an interesting article on "The Modern Movement in Illustration" and on "Decoration in Printing." There is also good sound advice to the buyer of printing which ought to be reprinted in full. Every careful effort such as this supplement should use types to their best advantage, as it trains the eyes of those who spend time over it, so that future book planning is better done. Good books are not easily planned without models at hand, and probably one of the best things that could be done by the book manufacturer is gradually to accumulate a shelf of good models from all publishers just as a printer like D. B. Updike produces his books with the aid of a great library of beautiful books covering several hundred years.

In commenting on books of the current month, we cannot include every good book printed, as some that deserve mention are bound to be omitted. It should be emphasized that the effort is not so much to make a catalog of good efforts as to keep the subject to the front, so that the manufacturing departments of the publishers shall realize that there is an interest in the production and that they shall also realize how much the sale of the book depends on its physical appearance.

Among good books that have appeared in the past few weeks are such volumes as "Seneca the Philosopher" by Richard Mott Gummere the first volume in a series published by Marshall Jones Company entitled Our Debt to Greece and Rome. The book is a small 12mo, with simple and excellent type page, a binding cloth that appeals to the eye and to the hand and a gilt top. It is a good beginning of an important series.

Two attractive poetry volumes are "The Village Street" by Frederick Faust, published by Putnam, and "Translations from the Chinese" by Christopher Morley (George H. Doran Company). The former has a type page and page margin that are attractive and decidedly satisfactory, and a simple and dignified binding. The latter admirably fits the subject, has a striking typographical plan and an interesting imported paper for the cover. Another book might be added to this list of poetry, "The Lute and Furrow" by Olive Tilford Dargan, published by Scribner. Scribner's usually have a most attractive format for poetry volumes, and there is excellent planning here to give the different lengths of poems their proper spacing on the page. A more elaborate effort in special typography comes from a new publisher in Chicago, Will Ransom, whose first volume is entitled "Open Shutters: A Volume of Poems" by Oliver Jenkins. Mr. Ransom is a new entrant into book-making, located at 14 West Washington Street, Chicago. This is a hand-set volume, done by the publisher himself, and the sheet is printed on hand-made paper from a hand press. The publisher intends, tho printing small editions, to give first attention to modern works. The volume is an octavo, and the type selected, balance of page and the compression reflect great credit on the new publisher. Of the title page we do not feel so sure, as the line drawing of a window with shutters and morning glories brings up the question of a decorated title, which is always an open debate. We have seen few decorated title pages except the architectural ones in some of Whittingham's books that have seemed satisfactory as title pages.

Little, Brown has for some time specialized on books on the theater and has adopted a somewhat uniform style that has been particularly satisfactory in type selection and arrangement. Percival Wilde's "Eight Comedies for Little Theaters" is a good example of their work.

Another recently developed style in book-making that has become very characteristic of one firm is the fiction form shown in Lucas Malet's "Da Silva's Widow." (Dodd, Mead). The full caps at the head of the page and the font and the spacing have become characteristic of much of their book-making, and few will open such a volume without distinct pleasure.

A small volume of good planning and pleasant page is that of "The Coming of Coal" by Robert W. Bruere (Association Press). These books have usually been marked by thoughtful preparation and careful adaptation to the text.

Stewart Kidd, whose efforts to maintain good standards of American book manufacture have been several times commented on, has made an attractive volume of "Aspects of Americanization" by Edward Hale Bierstadt. An interesting experiment is that of putting on the back of the title page not only the name of the press who printed it but also the fact that the book has been bound in the Interlaken cloth.

In a recent suggestion that more credit should be given to the printers in connection with the production of satisfactory books, one publisher has very properly pointed out that this cannot be laid down as a general rule, as in many cases the credit almost entirely belongs with the publisher who has become the real designer of the book. In "American Indian Life," a book published by Huebsch, the book that was then under discussion, Mr. Huebsch points out that composition, design, utilization of materials, combination of colors, etc., on the part of the designer rather than the way in which his scheme for the book was carried thru calls for admiration. This would make it impossible to make any uniform suggestion for giving credit to those co-operating in the production of the book, but if the credit does so belong, real creative work is part of the printer's responsibility, and certainly the credit might well be given to encourage further successes.

It is interesting to see coming into print again the volumes of "Little Journeys" from G. P. Putnam's Sons, as these familiar blue volumes were always an excellent example of fitting the typographical plan to the style of content, and booksellers will readily testify how much the form of the book has to do with its wide sale.

Another good example of fitting book-making to the subject is "Old Park Street and Its Vicinity" by Dr. Robert Means Lawrence (Houghton Mifflin). Its type, illustrations and attractive gray boards all are suitable.

Another interesting octavo is "Pieces of Hate" by Heywood Broun, which attracts attention by its good page and cover design.

It is not so often that books from Canada come to our attention for this comment, but an example of what a Canadian publisher can do is shown in the handsome octavo called "The Great War As I Saw It" written by Canon Frederick George Scott, published by F. D. Goodchild Company, Toronto.

John Howell of San Francisco has begun to put to book-trade use the distinguished printing shop which was established in that city a few years ago by Edwin Grabhorn, formerly of Indianapolis. Mr. Howell has printed with Mr. Grabhorn's typographical setting a poem by Bret Harte called "Dickens in Camp," with an introduction by Frederick S. Myrtle.

Obituary

MRS. CHARLES C. SHOEMAKER

MRS. CHARLES C. SHOEMAKER, wife of the well-known President of the Penn Publishing Company, and Vice-President of the National Association of Book Publishers, was tragically killed on July 31st, in a collision between a motor truck and a taxicab in which she was riding on the streets of the suburb of St. David's, just outside Philadelphia, where she lived. Both cars seemed to be going at a moderate rate, but the truck was hidden as it came from a cross street and Mrs. Shoemaker was instantly killed, while her companion, Miss Striker, escaped with injuries. Mr. Shoemaker was in Boston at the time of the accident. Mrs. Shoemaker was well known to many of the book-trade, who identify her with the fine hospitality of their beautiful suburban home at St. David's.

MARY NOAILLES MURFREE

MARY NOAILLES MURFREE, widely known as an author under the pen name of Charles Egbert Craddock, died at her home in Murfreesboro, Tenn., August 1, at the age of seventy-two years. She was born in 1850 at Grantlands, near Murfreesboro, and was the great-granddaughter of Col. Hardy Murfree, who served with gallantry and bravery in the Revolutionary War. As a child, Miss Murfree was an indefatigable student. She was unable to take part in childish pastimes because of lameness, so she devoted herself to reading. The summer home of the family was in the Tennessee mountains near Beersheba, and there she began writing for the Atlantic Monthly under the name of Charles Egbert Craddock, soon attaining high rank as one of the leaders in the new school of Southern fiction. Her first book was "In the Tennessee Mountains," published in 1884, which met with instant success, "Mr. Craddock" being hailed as a master in the art of description. After that Miss Murfree wrote many other charming stories, all dealing with the mountaineers of Eastern Tennessee. Her works include "Where the Battle Was Fought," 1884; "Down the Ravine," 1885; "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountain," 1885; "In the Clouds," 1886; "The Story of Keedon Bluffs," 1887; "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove," 1888; "In the 'Stranger People's' Country," 1891; "His Vanished Star," 1894; "The Phantoms of the Footbridge," 1895; "The Mystery of Witchface Mountain," 1895; "The Juggler," 1897; "The Young Mountaineers," 1897; "The Story of Old Fort Loudon," 1899; "The Bushwhackers and Other Stories," 1899; "The Champion," 1902; "A Spectre of Power," 1903; "Storm Centre," 1905; "The Frontiersman," 1905; "The Amulet," 1906; "The Windfall," 1907; "The Fair Mississippian," 1908; "Ordeal—A Mountain Romance of Tennessee," 1912; "Raid of the Guerilla," 1912; "The Story of Duciehurst," 1914.

JOHN E. LANDER

JOHN E. LANDER, representing Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., died at his summer home July 27th. He began as a boy with Lee & Shepard in 1883, and steadily advanced through every grade of stockroom and shipping service to representation on "the road," first in a subordinate capacity and later as head traveling man for Lee & Shepard. When this firm purchased the assets of the Lothrop Publishing Co. in 1904 and the present corporation was formed, the size and importance of the combined list of publications were such that Mr. Lander was able to restrict his routes to the East, his furthest western point being Pittsburgh, confining his attentions to the larger cities. Of late years his territory was exclusively New York City and the East. His all round activities entirely disproved the theory that a traveling man is of use only upon the road, as he was always busy at his desk when in the office, and proved himself highly efficient in judgment upon manuscripts and in other important ways.

MERRILL B. KETCHEM

MERRILL B. KETCHEM, for many years connected with W. K. Stewart Co.'s store, died in Indianapolis on July 30th. Mr. Ketchem was of one of the Hoosier capital's famous old families, a bookseller of discernment, and a booklover of taste. He contributed a series of humorous articles to the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY signed "Ketch" and entitled "Adventures in Bookselling" which attracted very favorable response by their natural humor and shrewd understanding of retail bookselling.

DAVID H. LLOYDE

DAVID H. LLOYDE, of D. H. Lloyd & Sons, one of the oldest booksellers in the Mid West, died at his home in Champaign, Illinois, on July, 1st. Altho in his eighty-eighth year, he was in daily touch with his business until a few weeks before his death. Born in Springfield, Mass., in 1835, his family moved to a prairie home in Illinois in 1838. He came to Champaign with his family in 1874 and became a partner in a bookstore started a few years before and was an active figure in the trade during a period of forty-eight years. He is survived by his widow and three sons, all the sons being connected with the two concerns of which their father was the head.

EHRMAN SYME NADAL

EHRMAN SYME NADAL, who was a Secretary of the United States Legation in London from 1877 to 1884, died July 26th in Princeton, N. J. of paralysis while visiting friends there. He wrote many articles for New York newspapers and was author of "Impressions of London Social Life," "Essays at Home and Elsewhere," "Notes of a Professional Exile," and "A Virginian Village." He was born in Greenbrier County, Va. in 1843, and graduated from Yale in 1864.

SIMON NELSON PATTEN

DR. SIMON NELSON PATTEN, for thirty years Professor and head of Economics in the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania, died July 24th in Brown's Mills, N. J. Dr. Patten was a well-known economist, his advanced and somewhat radical views arousing much public comment. He was born at Sandwich, Ill., May 1, 1852, was a student at Northwestern University from 1874—1876, took degrees of M. A. and Ph. D. at Halle, Germany. He was principal of public schools in Illinois and Iowa before going to the University of Pennsylvania. He was a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and from 1908 until 1909 President of the American Economics Society. His works include: "Premises of Political Economy" 1885; "Economic Basis of Protection," 1890; "Theory of Dynamic Economics," 1892; "Theory of Social Forces," 1896; "Development of English Thought," 1899; "Theory of Prosperity," 1902; "Heredity and Social Progress," 1903; "The New Basis of Civilization," 1907; "Product and Climax," 1909; "The Social Basis of Religion," 1911; "Reconstruction of Economic Theory," 1912; "Culture and War," 1916. Dr. Patten's last work was a philosophical novel published last fall. He said at the time that he was fulfilling the ambition of a life time in his old age, as he had always wished to be a novelist. The novel was called "Mud Hollow."

SARAH JEANETTE DUNCAN COTES

SARAH JEANETTE DUNCAN COTES, one of the most popular of Canadian novelists, died in England July 24th. She was born in Brantford, Canada in 1862 and entered the field of journalism when so far as women were concerned "it simply wasn't done." One of her earliest journalistic tasks was the reporting of the cotton centennial in New Orleans for the Toronto Globe and the Memphis Appeal. She was later on the staff of the Washington Post. She returned to Toronto, joined the editorial staff of the Globe, writing under the pen name of Garth Grafton.

She served as Parliamentary correspondent for the Montreal Star and went on a journey round the world for a syndicate of United States and Canadian papers, writing letters about her travels. Her first book, "A Social Departure," was very successful. In 1891 she married Everard Charles Cotes, whom she had met in Calcutta. Her later novels often treated of Indian life, tho some had a Canadian setting. Among the best-known titles are: "An American Girl in London," "An American Girl Abroad," "The Simple Adventures of a Memsahib," "His Honor and a Lady," "The Pool and the Desert," "Set in Authority," "A Burnt Offering," "His Royal Happiness," "The Imperialist." Her last novel, "Title Clear," was published last June.

JULES MARY

JULES MARY, the French novelist and dramatist, died in Paris July 27th at the age of 71. He was the author of many plays, among which were "The Swordman's Daughter" and "A Man's Shadow," as well as about fifty popular novels, including "Forbidden Love" and "Mademoiselle Guignon." None of his stories was translated into English.

Pen Women Selling Books

IN the effort to raise funds for the proposed club house and to bring the organization before the public, the New York League of American Pen Women turned to book-selling during the fortnight of July 24th to August 7th. Thru the committee, organized by Anne Parker Miner of New York City, letters have been sent to all members, canvassing for book orders which are to be promptly filled by the league thru arrangements it has made with six New York book houses. If a member does not want to check the list for summer reading, the committee will select boxes of books for $10, $15 or $25.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

TANTALLON Castle, in North Berwick, Scotland, for centuries the stronghold of the Douglasses, given additional fame by Scott who described it in "Marmion," is to be sold this summer.

The newly discovered manuscript novel of Guy de Maupassant, "Dr. Heraclius Gloss," about which there has been rumors for many years, is now being translated and will be published by Brentano's in the autumn.

Amy Lowell is writing a "Life" of John Keats which will be ready for publication next year. It will contain unpublished letters of both Keats and Fanny Brawne and a number of rare portraits. Miss Lowell has long been known as an enthusiastic Keats collector.

"The Etchings by James McNeill Whistler" by Campbell Dodgson, like other Studio publications, is beautifully printed and moderate in price. It contains ninety-six reproductions of etchings most of which are exceedingly well done. The introduction is a delightful and scholarly piece of writing and will be of interest in itself for Whistler collectors.

The Byron Palace at Ravenna, where the poet lived in 1819, one of the literary shrines of Italy, was recently destroyed by the Fascisti. The building was known in the Middle Ages as the Rasponi Palace and it situated across the square from Dante's tomb, which escaped injury. The palace was reduced to ruins because it was used as the headquarters of the Socialist Co-operative Society.

The book cart has been an important factor in the second hand book trade in Germany for many years. Since the war there has been a great change. High rents and the shortage of places of business have forced the dealers to put many of the newer publications on wheels.

This is giving the book cart men better profits than formerly. As a result the market for the cheaper second hand books, among which rarities were frequently found, has temporarily disappeared.

The first of a series of exhibitions under the auspices of the Columbia University Summer School, containing etchings by American and European artists, is now open to the public in Avery Hall. There are prints by Whistler, Zorn, Millet, Haskell, Nevinson, Haden, Hassam, Besnard, Roth, Braquemond, McLaughlin, Heinzelman, Kinney and others. Some of the best-known Whistlers are present, including the "Black Lion Wharf," "Becquet," "Little Rag Gatherers," and "The Forge." The Millet plates are "The Gleaners," "The Digger," and "The Carder."

A pathetic letter written by Heine was recently sold at auction in Berlin. The poet, writing from Paris in 1846 to the physician Dieffenbach, said: "The bearer of this letter is Mr. Lessalle, one of my most cherished friends. He can give you tidings of my mental and spiritual state. My cursed malady is very obstinate and gains ground in most shameless fashion. My soul is weary and dejected like a drenched butterfly. I ask your kind offices for my friend Lassalle, who is not one of the weaklings, and who possesses my full confidence."

"Proof Reading in the Fifteenth Century; an Examination of the Evidence Relating to the Correctors of the Press at Work in Paris prior to 1500," by Douglas C. McMurtrie, of Greenwich, Conn., is a little monograph in which the author summarizes the evidence adduced by Claudin in his "Histoire de l'Imprimerie en France," Paris, 1900, the same author's monograph on "The First Paris Press," and various references to proof reading and proof readers in Paris in the fifteenth century. But as the proof reader was often the textual editor, the evidence bears rather on scholarship than on printing.

An interesting incident in the English celebration of the Shelley centenary was the meeting held in Haymarket Theater under the auspices of the Keats-Shelley Memorial Association. Reports of the occasion announce that an eloquent address was made by Sir Rennell Rodd, and that among a number of other distinguished men who joined in the praise of the poet were J. C. Squire and John Drinkwater. Post Wheeler of the American Embassy, who spoke for the American admirers of Shelley, called attention to the little known fact that the poet's great-grandfather, Timothy Shelley, emigrated to New Jersey and that his grandfather was born in the Colony.

E. Weyhe, dealer in prints and art books, 710 Lexington Avenue, announces a new work on Rembrandt's etchings. It includes a complete set of facsimile reproductions, which, with a few exceptions, are in original size, and are made by a new process showing remarkable fidelity to the originals. In every case the reproductions are taken from the best possible proof of the etchings. The prints are mounted 19 $\frac{3}{4}$ by 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches and are enclosed in three port folios. There is an edition de luxe in which the prints are matted instead of being hinged. The prints are arranged in chronological order and the first volume has a general introduction by H. W. Singer.

The destruction of the Four Courts in Dublin has caused the loss of many original historical documents and manuscripts. Among the losses were the manuscript reports of the Irish Lords and Commons, said to be unique specimens of bookbinding and tooling. There was a complete set of original signatures of the Kings and Queens of Great Britain from Henry VIII down. Title deeds and leases lost with the record office dated as far back as 1174, and the office contained original parish registers of births, deaths and marriages from about the seventeenth century as well as chancery order books of equal age. The wills lost, however, date back only to about 1840. All the bankruptcy records seem to have been destroyed, and the Government will severely feel the loss of the census for the years 1831, 1841 and 1851, on which the operation of the old age pensions act largely depended. It is said that the entire legal machinery of the new Irish nation has been sadly impaired.

The editor of the London Spectator says that The Temple Bar edition of Boswell's

"Life of Johnson" "should prove an epoch-making edition of an epoch-making book."

Among the acquisitions of the Metropolitan Museum of Art announced in the current Bulletin is a thirteenth century manuscript from which certain leaves have been placed on exhibition. It is a Latin psalter containing the psalms from the first to the eightieth, except for places where initial letters have been cut out, consisting of forty-nine leaves of vellum, 11 by 8 inches, and is preceded by a much mutilated calendar of six leaves of the same size. There are also three full page illuminations, each with two scenes from the Passion of Christ, which seems once to have been a part of the psalter, to judge by their style, quality of workmanship and dimensions. It is conjectured, according to the Bulletin, that the psalter is of about 1265 and the work of Parisian craftsmen, as it bears a striking similarity to the famous Psalter of St. Louis in the Bibliothèque Nationale known to have been executed about that date. The calendar seems later, and, with a preponderance of British saints, is considered to be of British workmanship. These, says the Bulletin writer, represent Gothic writing and the art of illumination at its highest point.
